DENR defends log firms

Defensor rejects calls to cancel forest permits

By Volt Contreras and Cynthia D. Balana

ENVIRONMENT Secretary Michael Defensor brushed aside calls from militant and nongovernment organizations for the cancellation of government permits issued to logging companies operating in the typhoon-ravaged provinces of Quezon and Aurora.

"It's more the exception rather than the rule" if some logging companies have been violating their "contracts" with the government, which basically require them to replant trees in their areas and limit the volume of timber they can harvest, Defensor said yesterday at a press conference.

Defensor made the announcement as Malacbang warned logging companies that the government would be "unforgiving" of those who would violate President Macapagal-Arroyo's order on Saturday suspending all logging in the country.

"The President's order is firm and we are expecting strict compliance, especially among the logging companies in areas where there has been an obvious aggravation of public safety, and where lives and property continue to be under severe threat," Press Secretary Ignacio

LOS BAÑOS, Laguna—A confessed illegal logger feels no remorse despite the high death toll from the massive flooding and landslides blamed on the rampant cutting of trees in the forests of Infanta and Quezon.

"That was part of life. But I just want to make clear that it is the government that allows massive tree cutting by the country's big-time logging concessionaires," said Mang Berto (not his real name), who used to operate from Di-

Gov't needs more than P350M for rehab work

By Christine O. Avendaño and Michael Lim Ubac

THE GOVERNMENT would need more than P350 million—its current allocation for the rehabilitation of disaster areas—to rebuild cities, towns and villages devastated by the recent wave of typhoons.

Emerging from a Senate finance committee hearing on the budget proposal for her department for 2005, Social Welfare Secretary Corason Soliman said rehabilitation efforts would not only be concentrated in Quezon and Aurora—the provinces hardest hit by the last two typhoons—but also in Oriental Mindoro, Camarines Sur and Camarines Norte.

"I think we will need more than that for the rehabilitation of [those areas]," she told reporters.

The rehabilitation efforts would focus on infrastructure and houses damaged by floods and landslides, she said.

Soliman said resettlement was a "clear option" for residents in BRAVING bad weather, they rode on an outrigger boat on a mercy mission to bring relief goods to thousands of typhoon victims in northern Quezon.

Little did they know that they would come perilously close to being swallowed by the sea.

Some were in near tears, frightened out of their wits. Desperate for help, other kept on dialing numbers on their mobile phones—but there was no signal.

The group, comprising 40 volunteers from various organizations, recounted to the INQUIRER yesterday their brush with death when they boarded the "mercy ship" Grandstar 2 on Saturday to ferry relief goods to victims of successive typhoons which battered Quezon.

They were en route to Mauban port when the engine of their boat conked out, causing the vessel to drift.

For 40 minutes, strong winds and huge waves pounded the boat, soaking the shivering volunteers.

The crew tried in vain to fix the engine.

The volunteers, led by lawyer Asis Perez, director of Tanggol Kalikasan-Southern Tagalog, tried to put up brave faces. Lower House staff member Archie Malabanan occasionally cracked jokes, hoping to lift the spirits of the frightened women.

Painful lessons on how Filipinos value forests

TYPHOONS "Violeta," "Unding" and "Yoyong" and Tropical Depression "Winnie" were well on their way when a conference with scientists, experts, environment and local government officials was convened by Haribon, Birdlife International and the European Community on Nov. 9-12.

There could be no better place for it than the Subic Bay Forest Reserve. Encircled by widespread ecological mayhem, the nearly 50,000-hectare Subic and Bataan National Parks are a priority candidate for the National Integrated Protected Area System (NIPAS)—representative Philippine bioregions to be preserved at all costs if posterity is ever to glimpse its fast vanishing legacy on these islands.

Supreme Court upholds ruling on Tan tax cases

By Philip C. Tuleza

THE SUPREME Court has affirmed its original ruling denying government petition to transfer the P25-billion tax evasion cases against taipan Lucio Tan to the Court of Tax Appeals (CTA).

In a seven-page resolution dated July 17, the high court reiterated its decision that the Marikina Metropolitan Trial Court (MeTC)—and the CTA—should try the cases. It is the MeTC, and not the CTA, that has jurisdiction in the first instance over these cases, including the alignment thereon and the trial on merits, the court said. "Wherefore, appellee's motion for leave to file (a second) motion for reconsideration is denied. Let judgment entered in due course," it added. Solicitor General Alfredo Benipayo asked the tribunal to modify its July 13 ruling that revived the cases and order their transfer to the CTA. Benipayo said the cases should be referred since the CTA, under Republic Act 9282, had been vested with "exclusive original jurisdiction" over violations of the National Internal Revenue Code.

However, the high court noted that the cases were filed before RA 9282 was enacted into law. At that time, trial courts had original and exclusive jurisdiction over tax evasion cases.

The court also said that RA 9282 recognized that regular courts had original jurisdiction over tax cases where "there is no specified amount claimed." The tribunal noted that the cases against Tan had "no specified amount claimed," adding criminal complaints for tax evasion are insulated "not to demand payment, but to penalize the taxpayer for violation of the Tax Code."

In its unanimous decision on July 13, the tribunal reversed the rulings of the Court of Appeals and the Marikina Regional Trial Court which both affirmed the March 1999 decision of the MeTC to dismiss the tax evasion cases against Tan and several officers of Fortune Tobacco Corp.

The high court also nullified the decision of Marikina MeTC Branch 75 to junk the nine counts of tax evasion against the accused and ordered it to continue hearing the criminal cases.

"After a thorough review of the orders of the MeTC dismissing the criminal cases, this court finds that said orders were null and void and were a result of a gravely injudicious exercise of judicial authority," said the 34-page ruling penned by Associate Justice Adolfo Azcuna.

Besides Tan and Fortune Tobacco officers, the others accused in the cases were officials of nine dummy firms Tan allegedly used to avoid paying taxes.

Former BIR Commissioner Liwayway Vinzon-Chato initiated the case in September 1993 before the Department of Justice when Fortune Tobacco allegedly failed to pay its ad valorem, income and value-added taxes for 1990, 1991, and 1992.

After five years of legal maneuvering by Tan's lawyers, the DOJ decided that there was probable cause against the respondents and filed the case before the Marikina MeTC on Dec. 1, 1998.

But MeTC Judge Alex Ruiz dismissed the cases on March 22, 1999 after BIR Legal and Prosecution Division chief Osias Baldovino and Assistant Chief for Prosecution Romeo B. Buan told the court that the BIR reviewed Fortune Tobacco's records and found that it had not committed any tax fraud.

Those findings were approved by then BIR Commissioner Beethoven Ruako.

Telco execs prevail in franchise tax issue

By Carlito Pablo

THE SO-CALLED "lords of the cell phone ring" have prevailed over the government on the issue of instituting a franchise tax on telecommunications companies.

The executive and legislative branches are relegating to the back burner the proposed revenue measure following a meeting on Saturday between President Macapagal-Arroyo and the heads of the country's telecom giants.

The meeting was held at the Forbes Park, Makati, residence of the President, according to a source privy to recent developments.

In attendance for the telecom firms were Manuel Pangilinan of Philippine Long Distance Telephone-Smart Communications, Jaime Zobel de Ayala for Globe Telecom and Lance Gokongwei for Digital Communications, along with their respective corporate executives.

The source said that aside from President Arroyo, Trade Secretary Cesar Purisima, Finance Secretary Juanita Amatong and Finance Undersecretary Grace Tan Pulido represented the executive branch.

The legislative side was represented by Senate President Franklin Drilon, Senators Ralph Recto and Manuel Roxas III, and Representatives Jesli Lapus (NPC, Tarlac) and Eusebio Javier (Lakas, Antique).

It will be recalled that the representatives of the tobacco and liquor manufacturers were also called to a meeting with top government officials when the bill on the excise tax for "sin products" was being deliberated in the House.

That meeting was followed by the quick passage of the sin tax bill before the House although critics said that what was passed was a watered-down version.

Lapus, chair of the House ways and means committee, confirmed that the high-powered parley with the telecom representatives took place, describing it as a "consultation meeting."

"The meeting last week was an eye opener," Lapus said.

For one thing, he said, the government learned from the telecom executives that to apply a franchise tax on their businesses would "jeopardize the viability of some 80 or so players who are not even in the cellular (phone) business but were already in the red."

Secondly, "there's [no] entity [that could] absorb both a franchise (tax) and a VAT (value-added) tax," Lapus said without elaborating.

Obviously referring to Smart and Globe, Lapus added: "To target the two profitable ones would be opening up violations of uniformity of taxation."

Lapus said that in lieu of the franchise tax on telecom companies, the government would instead increase the VAT rate from the current 10 percent to 12 percent.

The VAT covers the whole range of commercial transactions across all sectors of the economy.

Why me, says Abadia on hidden wealth raps

By Carlito Pablo

RETIRED Gen. Lisandro Abadia says he felt betrayed by the complaint brought against him alleging he had stashed away unexplained wealth estimated by the Ombudsman at P11.2 million.

The case, he said, was a revival of an 11-year-old complaint.

"Why me?" the former Armed Forces of the Philippines chief of staff kept asking in an interview. "I gave the best years of my life for this nation, fighting Muslim and communist rebels and rightist coup plotters."

Abadia said the Ombudsman would not have come out with a resolution filing an unexplained wealth case against him before the Sandiganbayan had he been accorded due process.

"You see, I have to look for records from my old files because this case was filed way back in 1993," Abadia said. He brought along the files which he said clarified matters.

The documents included a deed of sale covering a property in Talisay, Cebu, which was bought for P2.5 million. He made an initial down payment on the property in 1992, he said.

The other documents were:

- Vouchers and checks showing proceeds of P2.9 million and P2.6 million from the sale in 1994 of Abadia's Palawan Oil shares in the stock market.

• Papers showing proceeds of P565,000 in 1991, and P3.2 million in 1993 from the sale of shares in Antipolo Properties Inc.

• A loan document of P3 million from Metrobank transacted in November 1993.

Abadia said that all the transactions were undertaken before his retirement on April 12, 1994.

He said that since he was retiring on the date, he chose not to file his statement of assets, liabilities and net worth in 1993. That was why he said his April 12, 1994, SALN covered the year 1993 and the first four months of 1994.

Abadia claimed that the 1993 complaint against him was filed by four fictitious persons led by a certain Jaime Reyes.

He also claimed that even the notary public marking on the complaint was fake.

Noting that the Ombudsman had given the order to prosecute him before the Sandiganbayan in a resolution dated Nov. 26, 2004, Abadia said: "That's 11 years and 3 months. This is certainly justice delayed and justice denied."

Worse, he said, he was not even called to any preliminary conference where he could have been asked to submit documents.

German killed in Davao Oriental

MATI, Davao Oriental—A German national was killed when two unidentified men shot him with handguns in Lupon town, also in this province, at around 3:30 p.m. on Monday.

Lupon Mayor Alfran Quilones identified the victim as Burkhard Muller, 49, a native of Munich, Germany.

Quilones said Muller, who had two daughters by his Filipino wife, Elia, was coming out of the gate of his residence when the suspects came up and shot him at close range.

He died from at least five bullet wounds in the head and four in the body.

Quilones said police were investigating the incident.

Muller's family said they had received an extortion letter from the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) before he was killed.

Muller had been living in the Philippines for 15 years and was touted to be wealthy but the nature of his business was not clear.

In nearby Cateel town, unidentified armed men strafed the house of German national Andres Steinel recently, according to a report released by police on Monday.

Steinel, 52, who is engaged in mining, was not hurt, however, in the shooting that occurred on Nov. 27.

His wife, Cynthia, said they had received an extortion letter prior to the incident but she did not say who had sent it. Ferdinand O. Tirona, DDI Mindanao Bureau

2 Filipinos wounded in recent Iraq violence

By TJ Burgenlo

TWO FILIPINOS were hurt in separate attacks on two US military camps in Iraq over the past couple of weeks, foreign affairs officials said yesterday.

Adolfo Abrea, 25, a mechanic from Samar, was hit by shrapnel in his lower left thigh when a Katyusha rocket hit a campsite of Prime Projects International (PPI) in Camp Victory on the morning of Dec. 1.

Abrea had been declared in stable condition, but he told Charge d'Affaires Ricardo Endaya on Dec. 3 that he still felt a "little numbness and discomfort in his left thigh," foreign affairs spokesperson Gilberto Asuque said.

He was set to be flown to Dubai yesterday for further medical treatment. His employer, PPI, had given assurance that he would be provided adequate medical attention.

Another Filipino, Ludwig Mark Reyes, was injured by shrapnel following a mortar attack on Camp Anaconda in late November.

"Mr. Endaya said that Mr. Reyes received immediate medical attention by camp doctors and is now recovering from the injuries," Asuque said.

Between 5,753 and 6,000 Filipinos are working in US military camps across strife-torn Iraq. Of these, 2,500 work in Camp Victory; 1,450, in Camp Anaconda, and 1,000, in Camp Cooke.

The past months, foreign affairs officials had been worried over the safety of the thousands of Filipinos working in US military camps and the hundreds eking out a living outside them in view of the escalating violence across Iraq.

On Nov. 20, Ambassador Roy Cimatu and some staff members of the Philippine Embassy in Baghdad took off for Jordan, fueling speculation that the embassy staff was evacuating in view of the worsening security situation.

Officials in Manila, however, were quick to dispel the reports, saying Cimatu had gone to Jordan to convince officials there to allow Iraq-based Filipino workers to seek refuge there in case they had to be evacuated in a worst-case scenario.

Left behind in Baghdad to work on the release of Filipino accountant Robert Tarongoy, who was abducted at gunpoint on Nov. 1, were Undersecretary Rafael Seguis, Endaya, and labor attaché Angelo Jimenez.

An official, however, admitted that transporting the workers by land from Iraq to a neighboring country was risky because of the suicide attacks, roadside bombings and the raging violence there.

Some 2,000 Filipinos had managed to slip into Iraq despite a government ban on the deployment of workers there in July in the aftermath of the abduction of Filipino truck driver Angelo de la Cruz, officials said.

'Yoyong' lowers prices

DAGUPAN CITY—For all its adverse effects, super Typhoon "Yoyong" also brought good news to some communities.

Consumers here suddenly had a grand time buying bangus after the price of Pangasinan's favorite fish on Friday plunged from P80 a kilo to P30-P40 a kilo after fishpen operators prematurely harvested their stocks.

The strong winds spawned by Yoyong also destroyed fish cages in Bolinao town, freeing their bangus stocks into the sea and into the hands of happy residents.

But Lino Fernandez, a fishpond operator and bangus wholesaler in Dagupan City, said the low price of bangus was only temporary, adding that the price could go up in the next few days.

"Many stocks were not supposed to be harvested yet but the fishpen operators were alarmed, by the super typhoon," he said.

In Baguio City, the price of strawberries also plunged from P80 a kilo to P25-P35 a kilo after farmers suddenly harvested them to avoid heavy losses from Yoyong.

Like the Pangasinan fishpen operators, farmers in Benguet started harvesting their flowers and vegetables on Thursday to take advantage of the calm weather.

The onslaught of the typhoon had been relatively mild, leaving most vegetable routes from Benguet and Mt. Province open to traffic, according to the Office of Civil Defense. Yolanda Sotelo-Fuertes and Vincent Cabrera, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Employers back 5-day work week to cut costs

By Blanche S. Rivera

"WE'RE in."

Employers yesterday backed a proposal by the Department of Labor and Employment to set a five-day work week to reduce factory costs.

Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry vice president Donald Dee said employers were also amenable to increasing the number of hours of work from eight to 12 a day in line with the DOLE plan because it would allow employees to have more time for their families and other activities.

He gave the assurance that a five-day work week would not adversely affect the salaries of monthly wage earners because the 12-hour day would translate to the same number of hours that workers render.

"It will not affect the wages. We're not looking at it from a savings point of view. We support DOLE's proposal for a five-day work week because it will also help the workers," Dee said.

He said DOLE had been consulting with different employer and employee groups about the feasibility of a five-day work week.

A tripartite council was studying the proposal, but most employers favored the idea, he said.

Dee disclosed that DOLE had prepared a draft order on the new work schedule, but said it was not yet final.

"Our concern is if the employees are strong and healthy enough to work for 12 hours each day," Dee, former president of the Employers Confederation of the Philippines, said.

"We have to fortify the workers. We have to make sure that they can do longer hours. Otherwise it would be counterproductive," he added.

About 98 percent of the country's employers manage small- and medium-scale enterprises and keep small staffs. Big companies with large numbers of workers comprise the other two percent.

Wet Christmas predicted

By Norman Bordadora

THE CHRISTMAS season will be rainier than usual in Luzon, the Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) has said in its most recent advisory on the El Niño phenomenon that is already in the Philippines.

In fact, one or two more tropical cyclones are likely to hit the country, according to the weather bureau.

Citing the latest climate information and predictions, Dr. Prisco Nilo, Pagasa officer-in-charge, said the rainfall in December will be "near to above average over most parts of Luzon."

Luzon had already exceeded its average rainfall for November with the passing of tropical cyclones Unding, Violeta and Winnie, he said.

More consistent with the dry spells associated with El Niño is the current weather in the Visayas and most of Mindanao.

Rainfall in western Luzon, the Visayas and Mindanao were observed to be below average for November, Nilo said.

Less than average rainfall is also expected in December in the Visayas and Mindanao.

"Lower than average rainfall conditions are expected in Regions 6, 7 and 8, and most parts of Mindanao, he said.

Former broadcaster shot dead in Sultan Kudarat

TACURONG CITY—Two unidentified gunmen shot dead a broadcaster-turned-town councilor of Lambayong, Sultan Kudarat, while she was visiting a relative here, police said Monday.

Amy Corpuz, three-time town councilor, succumbed to multiple gunshot wounds and did not reach the hospital alive, according to Chief Insp. Raul Supiter, Tacurong police chief.

The attack on Corpuz came 18 hours after motorcycle-riding men shot dead the acting mayor of Talitay, Maguindanao, while he was driving home in Cotabato City.

Corpuz, 40, had just arrived at the home of her sister-in-law, Dr. Helen Lechonito, at noon on Monday when one of two gunmen shot her from behind.

As she fell to the ground, the other suspect opened fire with a .45-cal. pistol, hitting her in the breast.

Former Sultan Kudarat Rep. Angelo Montilla believed the attack was politically motivated. Montilla ran for governor in the last election with Corpuz as one of the candidates for the provincial board.

"We appeal to the police to dig deeper into the case. We would like to find out who mas-termined the killing," Montilla told reporters.

Montilla said he and Corpuz had a pending election protest before the Commission on Elections.

Corpuz, who worked with the Notre Dame Broadcasting Corp. in Kidapawan City before entering politics in the early '90s, had been receiving death threats from unknown persons before she was murdered, police said.

In Cotabato City, Zaidamen Midtimbang, president of the Talitay Association of Barangay Chairmen and acting town mayor, was driving along Sinsuat Avenue at around 6:30 p.m. on Sunday when two men on a motorcycle began firing at him.

Midtimbang, brother of Guindolungan, Maguindanao, Mayor Midpantao Midtimbang and Talayan Mayor Udzag Midtimbang, was with his wife and two children when the shooting occurred, according to Cotabato City Mayor Muslimin Sema.

Sema said the victim's wife managed to return fire with her husband's pistol and hit the suspects, but the armed men still managed to flee.

Police were investigating the attack. Edwin O. Fernandez, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Religious groups vow to bring abuses in Mindanao to light

By Germelina Lacorte
PDI Mindanao Bureau

DAVAO CITY—International groups opposed to the US war on terror have vowed to bring the facts about human rights abuses and other forms of economic violence happening in Mindanao to the international human rights tribunal and the United Nations Commission on Human Rights after a weeklong visit to areas torn by war and violence here.

Over 300 Filipinos from all over the country and 40 foreigners representing religious groups from around the world were here recently to visit conflict areas.

They said after their visit that they had seen with their own eyes what they called the "new faces of the US empire," referring to the small-scale miners affected by the entry of big mining corporations in Compostela Valley's mining town of Diwalwal, the ethnic tribes affected by Davao del Norte's Saug Dam project, and the families displaced by the war between the government and Moro rebels in Pikit, North Cotabato.

David Wildman, executive secretary of the US-based United Methodist Church's General Board for Global Ministries, said the group would work to bring the problems affecting Mindanao to the international body and to raise the awareness of the international community on what was happening here.

The group, which billed itself "the first people's forum on peace for life," also wants an international fact-finding body to look into the human rights abuses in Mindanao, particularly those perpetrated against Muslims and Moro tribes.

Participants raised their concern over the holding of joint RP-US Balikatan exercises in Mindanao and the increased American presence, including the setting up of a virtual US consulate at a university here.

"We are gravely concerned about the affliction that we have heard and seen," said Wildman in a statement.

"The Mindanao situation reflects a resurgence of a new colonization: the sustained US military war exercises, the increased interference in the internal peace process, and the renewed influx of aid and corporate investment that can deepen the exploitation of Mindanao's patrimony and natural resources," Wildman said.

"Perhaps, not many people here know that many peoples around the world, and American people in particular, took a strong stance against the US war against Iraq," he added.

He called on the group to continue resisting the "empire," meaning the combined economic, military and political domination of the powerful to advance their interest on a global scale.

The US, he said, spends more than $400 billion a year on bases in over 150 nations all over the world.

"The present empire has religious voices that the war against terror is God's will and demonizes Muslims," he said.

In the last seven days, the group, mostly leaders of various faiths including Hindus, Buddhists, Muslims and Christians, went to conflict and violence-prone areas in Mindanao, like Diwalwal, Davao del Norte's Asuncion town, and Pikit where they were able to talk to small-scale miners, the indigenous tribes opposing the Saug river dam project, and evacuees.

South African professor and clergyman Maake Masango said one of his most moving experiences was talking to the indigenous peoples, "not in the language learned from colonizers (English), but from the language that God has given her."

Fr. Bienvenido Triniña, convenor of InPeace Mindanao, also read a statement calling on international human rights bodies to investigate human rights violations in Mindanao and what he called the "genocidal war against the Bangsamoro people."

"We call for international solidarity to support the Bangsamoro people's right to self-determination and to support the indigenous people's campaign to end ethnocide," Triniña said in a statement read before reporters.

GMA orders Internet linkup for all public high schools

By Jolene R. Bulambot
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Soon, most public high schools in the country will be connected to the Internet.

President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday made this assurance during the opening of the First National Congress on Information Communications Technology in Basic Education at the Waterfront Hotel here.

In her speech, the President said that before her term ends in 2010, computers would have been installed in every public high school—most of which would have access to the Internet—to push information technology in the country.

Ms Arroyo said teachers should make information and communications technology (ICT) the focal point of their innovative approach to education so that the Philippines could sustain its role as one of the world's top suppliers of ICT workers.

"Teachers must be the front liners in innovation, continually seeking out new and better ways of teaching, to continually seek new technology... and not (get) caught in a traditional, outdated mode of instruction," the President said.

She emphasized the primary role of teachers and educators to produce skilled and knowledgeable workers needed by ICT firms, especially since ICT has become the economic lifeline of thousands of Filipino families.

Ms Arroyo noted that there has been a 118 percent increase in investments in IT and electronics, which would in turn create about 25,000 jobs in 10 months.

She also said five big ICT firms in Japan have, firming up plans to locate their operations here.

Before gracing the congress, Ms Arroyo was at the Asiatown IT Park, just across from the Waterfront Hotel, to inaugurate E-Telecare International, the biggest Asia-based call center.

About 800 people attended the opening of the two-day congress, many of them teachers and administrators of private and public schools and representatives of non-government organizations.

Roberto Romulo, chair of the Foundation for Information Technology Education and Development (FIT-ED), said the congress' objective is to emphasize the benefits of using technology as a tool for teaching and learning.

FIT-ED is an NGO which is working with the Department of Education to increase IT awareness in the country.

The congress, Romulo said, would also discuss how various technologies such as computers, the Internet, radio, television and telephones could be used to make learning more effective.

THE DAILY GOSPEL

Tuesday, December 7, 2004
2nd Week of Advent

1st Reading: Is 40:1-11
Gospel: Mt 18:12-14

Jesus said to his disciples, "What do you think of this? If someone has a hundred sheep and one of them strays, won't he leave the ninety-nine on the hillside, and go to look for the stray one? And I tell you: when he finally finds it, he is more pleased about it than about the ninety-nine that did not get lost. It is the same with your Father in heaven: there they don't want even one of these little ones to be lost."

Commentary

This story shows that God doesn't think in percentages. Compare it with the following, "Caiphas, who was high priest that year, said [to the Sanhedrin], 'You know nothing at all! You do not understand that it is better for you to have one man die for the people than to have the whole nation destroyed'" (Jn 11:49-50). In other words, since it was politically expedient it was all right to put an innocent man to death. Caiphas was the high priest but he thought like a politician, an unscrupulous one at that. It should serve for all time as a warning to all priests, high and low.

A neighbor long ago had twelve children, and when the eldest emigrated to America she was heart-broken. That evening she said to the others through her tears, "It will be easy to count you now!" That's how mothers think: not in numbers or percentages. That seems to be how God thinks too.

UN cites RP's antidrug effort

By Christian V. Esguerra

THE COUNTRY has finally earned the international community's nod for its all-out war against drug trafficking.

The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) has cited the Philippines for having detected and dismantled a "record number" of shabu (methamphetamine hydrochloride) laboratories and for the "record high" confiscation of the banned substance and its precursor ingredients.

The honor was included in the UNODC report delivered during the 28th Meeting of the Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies of Asia and the Pacific in Bangkok, Thailand.

The UNODC particularly commended the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency for its efforts despite its depleted manpower, which got a boost from the police Anti-Ilegal Drugs Special Operations Task Force.

Achievement

The office noted the country's accomplishment last year after President Macapagal-Arroyo declared a renewed crackdown against illegal drugs.

From June to December 2003, authorities dismantled 11 shabu laboratories and confiscated 3.1 tons of the drug and 5.1 tons of ephedrine, a key ingredient in the manufacture of shabu.

"The UNODC observed that, while statistics on drug seizures such as those mentioned are indicators of the drug situation in a country, they are also good indicators of the effectiveness of the drug enforcement authorities in the conduct of antidrug operations," PDEA chief Anselmo Avenido Jr. said in a statement.

Before the citation, the PDEA had been irked by a separate UN study identifying the Philippines as a major producer of shabu.

Sought for comment, PDEA deputy chief Rodolfo Caisip yesterday said he was particularly dismayed by the UN report claiming that the country was the third leading shabu exporter in the world.

"We thought that was unfair because the UN was seeing only the other side of our accomplishments, that there were so many drugs in our country," Caisip told the INQUIRER.

"But more important should be the fact that we are arresting and jailing drug lords and confiscating illegal drugs. We hope that the country's bad image would be changed with the UN's latest citation," he said.

Cop chiefs revolt vs term extension

By Christian V. Esguerra

PHILIPPINE National Police Director General Edgar Aglipay is under fire from his own men.

The Association of Chiefs of Police of the Philippines Inc. (ACPP) yesterday issued a resolution condemning the practice of extending the terms of service of retiring police officers, the very manner by which Aglipay became PNP chief in August.

An organization of active and retired police officers, the ACPP is headed by its president, Deputy Director General Ricardo de Leon, Aglipay's classmate at the Philippine Military Academy and his handpicked successor in the PNP anti-illegal drugs task force.

Aglipay's own spokesperson, Senior Supt. Leopoldo Baraol, is also a member of ACPP.

In the resolution, the group said term extension "produces destructive effects to the morale of the officer corps, such as the palakasan (favored) and bata-bata (patronage) system," even if it was "acceptable to the beneficiary."

The scheme also "casts the organization into disrepute and eventually into disintegration" that "deprives" other police officers of their opportunity to rise to higher positions.

"Therefore, be it resolved as it is hereby resolved to reject any more extension of officers due for retirement," the ACPP, which is chaired by retired police general Guillermo Domondon, said.

The resolution was the first sign of open opposition to Aglipay's appointment as the country's top cop after President Macapagal-Arroyo gave him a six-month term beginning August even if he was to retire in September.

A member of PMA Class '71, Aglipay reached the mandatory retirement age of 56 on Sept. 13. His term is set to expire in February.

Already, there has been persistent talk the President might extend his term again.

As it is, a number of top police officials, some of whom are known Aglipay supporters but are itching to replace him, have been silently grumbling over his term extension.

Of the contenders, the most senior is Deputy Director General Reynaldo Velasco, the PNP's no. 3 man. He is even more senior than Aglipay, having received his third star ahead of the PNP chief.

Another top choice is Deputy Director General Virgil Gil, the PNP's second in command who, like Velasco, was Aglipay's classmate in the PMA.

Aglipay's term extension would leave Gil only a month to serve in case he is chosen before his own mandatory retirement on March 14 next year, and Velasco only three months before his retirement in May.

The extension had dashed the hopes of former contenders, Directors Eduardo Matillano and Enrique Galang Jr.

Matillano, also a member of PMA '71, retired on Nov. 30, while Galang, of Class '72, is set to retire on Dec. 24.

Aglipay would not have been chief had not then Director General Hermogenes Ebdane Jr. cut short his own term by four months. Ebdane was supposed to retire on Dec. 31.

NPA rebel killed in Agusan Norte

ZAMBOANGA CITY—At least one communist rebel was killed when soldiers, backed by two helicopter gunships, overran a New People's Army camp in Agusan del Norte, the military said Sunday.

The soldiers, supported by two MG-520 helicopters, clashed with about 60 members of the NPA in their encampment outside Nasipit town on Saturday, Col. Domingo Tutaan said.

The rebels fled to the surrounding mountains. One dead guerrilla and his rifle were recovered along with a power generator and rebel documents, the military said. No soldiers were hurt in the incident.

According to Tutaan, the assault was mounted to prevent the rebels from carrying out a series of planned attacks in the area.

In Surigao del Norte, troops confiscated a cache of homemade land mines, detonating devices and assorted ammunition from an NPA camp on Wednesday, a military report said yesterday.

A platoon of the 30th Infantry Battalion was conducting anti-insurgency operations when they overran the NPA encampment in Barangay Camam-onan, Gigauit, the report said.

The land mines were attached to four live rounds of 60-mm mortar, according to Maj. Gen. Samuel Bagasin, chief of the 4th Infantry Division. Bagasin said the troops also recovered three hand grenades from the NPA camp.

The NPA announced in October that it would step up its attacks against government forces.

napig town in Isabela down to Polillo island in northern Quezon.

The Inquirer was able to convince Mang Berto to share his experience as an illegal logger after much prodding from his son "to give the public a much deeper understanding of the dynamics of the underground trade."

"My father was not bad. He was just forced by the consequences and the necessity to make ends meet for his growing family," Mang Berto's son said before the interview.

Mang Berto, now in his late sixties, said he started in the mid-1950s under the employ of a Chinese businessman, a certain Mister Song, who owned a licensed sawmill in Barrio (now barangay) Banugao in Infanta.

Song also had logging interests in Barrio Calubaguis in the Agta point on Polillo Island.

"Mister Song owned the first sawmill in northern Quezon. I was a personal aide to him, a trusted errand boy," he recalled.

After staying with Song for two years, Mang Berto called it quits and stayed in Manila to help a relative in his hardware business. In 1965, he worked for a certain William Tan, owner of Superwood Logging Co., in the village of Alayon in Burdeos town in Polillo.

"Mr. Tan's licensed logging area covers almost half of Mt. Malulud. He competed with Universal Timber Corp. In the lucrative logging business on the island," the old man said.

"I worked as a checker, mainly for those logs for export. Japanese and Taiwanese ships regularly docked in Polillo to haul square logs," he said.

Easy money

After a couple of years, he again decided to stop working and came back to Manila. But the smell of easy money from freshly cut hardwood lured him back to the trade.

In 1975, Mang Berto found himself working again in a logging firm in Burdeos town under another Chinese businessman.

The businessman, according to Mang Berto, possessed a legal permit to cut trees but decided instead to operate a sawmill to serve other logger-businessmen in the area who had no sawmill.

He said most licensed logging companies also bought hot logs from carabao loggers.

"During those times, we used the services of the hildor to pull the logs to the sawmill using their carabao," he said.

He said a big carabao could haul a log measuring 200 board feet. "We paid the carabao logger 25 centavos per board foot of log hauled to the sawmill," Mang Berto said.

They sold a board foot of lauan from 75 centavos to P1.25. A board foot of narra cost P2.50 to P3 then.

"There were no big-time illegal loggers during those times. The cutting of trees was done by licensed loggers. A carabao logger cutting one or two trees was an illegal logger but he was not big-time," he said.

Grease

In 1985, having learned the ins and outs of the illegal trade, Mang Berto decided to operate on his own.

"My family was getting bigger, so were their needs. My children were then entering college. I had to earn more money for them," he said.

"Besides, what I was mostly doing for my former boss was also the dirty part of the business. I was in charge of distributing grease money for protection—the SOP or the standard operating payment."

He said he got P200,000 in capital for his illegal logging venture from a certain "Pueteng," a big-time smuggler in the 1980s, who also had interests in logging in Isabela and Quezon.

"I met him when he was hiding from the authorities for his smuggling business. He requested me to handle the operation of his copra trading on Polillo Island, which I did for him," Mang Berto said.

He said he was the one who introduced Pueteng to the lucrative logging business.

He recalled that when square logs of hardwood were found floating near Polillo, he quickly saw the potential of quick money from them. The logs came from a foreign ship that sank in the high seas.

"I used P30,000 from the copra money to buy the logs in possession of the fishermen. Pueteng even scolded me, but after I sold the logs to a sawmill operator in Mauban, I netted at least P60,000. That was the time Pueteng decided to get involved in the logging business. He saw the bright potential of earning easy money," Mang Berto said.

Using his closeness to a high government official during the martial law regime, Pueteng controlled the vast logging business in Isabela and Quezon, according to Mang Berto.

So influential was the Chinese businessman that during the time of his death in a car accident in San Pablo City sometime in 1990, a military colonel was in the driver's seat.

Barges, envelopes

Mang Berto said he started his illegal logging business in Palanan, Isabela.

"I had five power saw operators and five helpers. Most of the time, it took a year before I saw my family. They would just get money from a Chinese businessman in Quezon with whom I had business dealings."

"Two of Pueteng's five barges were assigned to me. I regularly hauled narra and ibano (black kamagong) from Isabela to Pueteng's sawmill in Mauban. I spent P2.50 for every board foot of narra. I sold it to Pueteng for P9.50. Pueteng then sold it in Manila for P17.50," Mang Berto said.

"Most of the time, I escorted the hauling of my logs to Manila using documents provided by the DENR with the help of Pueteng. I also prepared several envelopes with money for ready distribution along the route," he said.

Mang Berto's son, who is now working in a Makati office, said: "Most of the time, I helped him in the preparation of grease money in envelopes."

Converse shoes for the NPA

Mang Berto said the envelopes were for the local officials, corrupt environment officials and police manning checkpoints along the route of the cargo.

"There was also a regular envelope for the New People's Army operating in the logging area. During Christmas and special occasions, the NPA would ask for canned goods and black Converse shoes. I just acceded to their request to ensure the smooth operation of the business," he said.

Mang Berto recalled that illegal loggers like him would find themselves converging in a house in Quezon City owned by a Chinese businessman to sell hot logs. "When we met there, it was fun. We shared problems as well as the good times," he said.

In 1993, when all of his children had finished college, Mang Berto decided to end his illegal trade.

"Besides, it was getting too dangerous. The Philippine Navy regularly conducted sea patrols. And they were the only ones who did not accept grease money," he said.

Navy patrol

Every time his boat met a Navy vessel on patrol, Mang Berto said his men would immediately throw all the logs into the sea.

"It was money lost. But it was much better than facing a naval officer. A corresponding criminal charge would surely come next. Appearing in court was another extra time," he said.

Today, bribing people costs a lot, according to Mang Berto. "You have to bribe them all. There are lots of unscrupulous government personnel now than in the past," he said.

Mang Berto now stays with his wife in a Laguna town, enjoying whatever is left of his money from his illegal logging days.

The old man made it clear that he did not operate his illegal logging activities in the Sierra Madre part of northern Quezon.

"My conscience is clear. The time that I spent in Infanta was with a government-licensed logging firm during my initial year in the business," he said.

Asis Perez, director of Tanggol Kalikasan-Southern Tagalog, an environmental legal defense center based in Lucena, was present during the interview.

Perez, a lawyer, said he was also interested in whatever information that Mang Berto could supply for the data bank of his office.

"Basically, what he narrated was the same information that we have in our files. He just validated it with his detailed story," the lawyer said.

Cash-strapped Pagasa craves 'pork' chops

ministration (Pagasa) needs P60 million to P100 million annually for six years, or the equivalent of three to five congressmen's pork barrel allocations, for its modernization and rehabilitation scheme.

The amount represents 15 percent of a scaled-down P2.7 billion needed for the weather bureau to modernize itself, according to Dr. Alan Pineda, assistant weather services chief of Pagasa.

Jica grant

For the remaining 75 percent, Pagasa plans to ask the Japan International Cooperation Agency (Jica) for a grant, or the Japan Bank for International Cooperation (JBIC) for a loan.

Pagasa's yearly budget is P300 million. It cannot afford to deduct P60 million to P100 million a year to finance the local counterpart funds.

"We've thought of asking congressmen to allocate part of their pork barrel to Pagasa," Pineda said, adding in jest: "We could probably name a building or a forecasting center after them."

Pineda said Jica had offered a P1-billion grant, while JBIC was willing to loan the weather bureau the entire P2.7 billion, payable in 30 years at less than one percent interest per annum, with a 10-year grace period.

Modernization program

"The problem is where to source local counterpart funds. We need P360 million to P600 million for the entire six-year project," he said.

Asked if the P2.7-billion cost could still be reduced, Pineda said Pagasa's modernization program was first proposed in 1997 with a budget of P6 billion.

The amount had been scaled down to P2.7 billion in 2000, but so far, there had been no sign of legislative action except for evaluations by the National Economic and Development Authority and a House bill filed by then Eastern Samar Rep. Eduardo Nachura calling for Pagasa's modernization.

The amount would barely cover the minimum requirements of the bureau, said Pineda. Already, 80 percent would be allocated to weather forecasting and warning equipment and the rest for manpower training.

Pagasa had also made representations with Quezon Rep. Rafael Nantes, whose constituency was among those heavily affected by Tropical Depression "Winnie" and Typhoons "Violeta," "Unding" and "Yoyong," as well as Sen. Ramon Magsaysay Jr., chair of the Senate committee on science and technology, for renewed legislative efforts.

Wish list

And here's the rest of the weather bureau's wish list: seven radars, one of which will be dedicated to forecasting rainfall in Metro Manila; a "supercomputer" to analyze weather observation data; a satellite tracking device and imaging system that could tap onto a Japanese satellite and help monitor cloud formations in the country; improved telecommunication system, and regionalized weather forecasting and warning system.

"Right now, observed data are transmitted from observation centers in the provinces to Quezon City where they are analyzed. Only then can we issue the appropriate forecast and warning," Pineda said.

Ideal setup

Under an ideal setup, weather warnings for, say, Negros Occidental would no longer have to pass through Quezon City.

"Our weather people in the Visayas should be able to do that," he said.

Under the proposed setup, Pagasa should have weather forecasting centers in Tuguegarao for Cagayan Valley, Baguio City for northern Luzon, Legaspi City for Bicol, Mactan in Cebu for the Visayas, Cagayan de Oro and Davao cities for Mindanao.

Malacanan yesterday supported Pineda's proposal, saying that the weather bureau needed an equipment upgrade, not a revamp of management, to boost its weather forecasting operations.

"I don't think there is any question on their job performance. They (Pagasa) did a good job," said Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye, despite criticism that the agency had been late in giving storm signal warnings that might have reduced the number of fatalities and damage caused by the string of typhoons in the last two weeks.

Bunye said President Macapagal-Arroyo did not order a review of Pagasa's operations after some sectors claimed that it had "bungled" its job when it did not provide timely storm warnings when the successive cyclones pummeled the country between Nov. 19 and Dec. 2.

The string of typhoons left more than 1,000 dead and billions of pesos in damage to property and crop losses. With a report from Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

Painful lessons of how Filipinos value forests

the late '90s, there's a lot of bird song here to feed a city dweller's hunger for treasures in the wild.

Seven years ago, scientists on a wildlife survey sighted a Philippine hawk-eagle, a spotted bush-tanager, a Luzon scops owl, a Philippine eagle owl, a green racket-tail, a red-crested Malkoha and its scale-feathered kin, a rufous cou, a blackish cuckoo-shrike, a white-fronted tit and a white-lored oriole around Subic Bay—vanishing treasures all.

Biological diversity

Soon after, the scientists declared: "The Philippines has perhaps the greatest concentration of unique biological diversity of any country in the world, (with) an astonishingly high proportion of endemic species."

Nearly half or 44 percent of our bird species, 64 percent of our mammals, 73 percent of our reptiles and amphibians, and 44 percent of our flowering plants are found nowhere else in the world. In this position of planetary privilege, why is our country also the hottest of hot spots with perhaps the greatest concentration of endangered species of birds and mammals? Thereby hangs our tale.

Their homes, an exquisite rainbow of life, are nine forms of forest evolved through millennia across our archipelago—lowland tropical rainforest, mid-mountain forest, mossy forest, limestone forest, pine forest, beach forest, mangrove forest, freshwater and swamp forest. Each one is home to life forms with specialized functions irreplaceable in the close weaving of an ecosystem.

Haribon has spent the past 21 years in scholarship and advocacy for this teeming reality and its life-and-death stakes. Under Subic's towering trees, the memory of awakening with Asin in live concert was a perfect prelude to the next few days' news of time running out on the Philippines.

Vanishing forests

Assisted by the Ateneo School of Governance, La Salle Institute of Governance and the University of the Philippines' Center for Local and Regional Governance, it was back to school for mayors, governors, government officials, freelance environmentalists and volunteers.

The first hard lesson: the Philippines is no longer short of laws to protect what's left of its web of life. However, forest depletion continues by an estimated 200,000 hectares a year.

"One of the highest in the world," said Haribon scientist and program director Blas Tabaranza Jr. This is equivalent to a yearly loss of P11.9 billion.

But government reforestation over the past two decades has achieved only a "30-percent success rate," said the new environment secretary, Michael Defensor. Former environment official Ben Malayang named the stubborn root cause: near total ignorance of the forest's pivotal role in the chain of life among city-bred Filipinos who see it only as a source of products, if not a haven for outlaws.

Crimes against trees

Crimes against the forest now include even the "revolutionary tax" which communist rebels charge loggers. Meanwhile, shortsighted national goals, still in thrall to the colonial perspective of all land as "the property of the king" (aka Regalian Doctrine), allow progressive decimation of what little tribal wisdom we have left.

Culture is a forgotten dimension of forest protection, Malayang noted. Forest-born tribal cultures offer a nation drowning in crimes against Nature ancient knowledge of how the natural world works and how humans share its fate. But a recalcitrant Congress took over a decade to pass an Indigenous Peoples Rights Act (IPRA) which gave indigenous communities the right to protect their ancestral domain.

A retired Supreme Court justice also waged an extended legal battle with the Office of the Solicitor General, questioning the "constitutionality" of the IPRA. It was finally passed into law but continued to struggle for implementation.

This echo of the Marcos years is only one of the many questions of primary value our nation must grapple with for survival. Cross-purposes and mixed motives have hardened through time.

For one, Antonio Contreras, a doctor of forestry and now dean of La Salle's College of Arts and Science, believes that Marcos' community forestry program was more of "an instrument to legitimize the state's relationship with rural people when populations and insurgency were rising in upland areas."

Culture of command

In 1982 came the expanded strategy of an Integrated Social Forestry Program, giving 25-year leasehold agreements to communities and households "to confine their production systems to communal or household agro-forestry farms" with "secure tenure and a source of livelihood."

Such is the chasm between the government and grass roots that again, "substantial restrictions on land-use practices relegated local people to roles in which they carried out activities designed primarily by state officials."

This culture of command spilled over into the policies of the immediate post-Marcos years, when the government entered hinterland barangays and "increased control over forest management" in the name of "poverty alleviation and empowerment."

But this was really a "cost-cutting measure," said Contreras, talking advantage of community volunteerism without devolving "authority to make management decisions on forest resources."

On this track, forestry programs, largely funded by foreign donors and limited to an average of five years, fenced people off from the forest while providing them "alternative but rarely sustainable livelihoods" and "limited access to forest products without adequate support for sustainable markets."

Forests fight back

With such pittance, not even the Local Government Code's transfer of responsibility for forest management to local government units (LGUs) in 1991 could break the main stranglehold of Philippine national life—"a political culture where local political units are rarely interested in forest management unless it offers political or fiscal benefits, especially as the conduit for political and economic patronage, which often, has led to forest destruction."

Time is a stern teacher. At this writing, a steeply rising death toll caused by flash floods from denuded forests is still teaching the Filipino majority the intimate connections between wrong ideas and environmental destruction, political will, life and death.

Now, fresh fiscal crisis practically "forces devolution of forest management to the LGUs"—a crucial assignment with a big IF. Only if communities far and wide can find their way back to "true sustainability and real responsibility" can we hope to hang on to what remains.

But with a national spirit still divided by colonial blindness, pressured by the need of many and the greed of a well-connected few still rampaging in crisis, the Arroyo administration's schizoid thrust for all-out mining casts a new dark shadow over our web of life.

"How we value our forests will define our management thrust and the direction that we want to pursue [but] our policy thrust is still unclear," said Malayang.

In a week or so, this understatement would echo in more lives lost in the season's flash floods while rich "legal" loggers disappear along with illegal loggers.

For revealing this hard reality, provincial journalists are killed.

WAR CRIMINALS!

This picture dated August 1945 in the Mariana Islands shows the US crew of the B-29 "Enola Gay" plane, which dropped the first atomic bomb in history. Japanese antiwar campaigners said Dec. 6 they planned a "people's tribunal" over the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki that could symbolically hold the United States responsible for war crimes.

7 killed, Filipino hurt in consulate bombing

JEDDAH—Islamic militants threw explosives at the gate of the heavily guarded US consulate in Jeddah, then forced their way into the building, prompting a gun battle that left seven people dead and several wounded, including a Filipino, before the three-hour crisis was brought under control.

Three attackers were among those killed, while two others were wounded and arrested, the Saudi interior ministry announced. Saudi security officials said four of their forces, who apparently stormed the compound after the initial attack, were killed.

ABS-CBN News in the Philippines identified the wounded Filipino as Wenceslao Pescante, 56, a carpenter. It did not give his hometown but said he had been hit by several bullets but was not in critical condition.

Saudi officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said some Indian and Sudanese employees of the consulate were taken hostage and later freed.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility. Saudi officials have blamed al-Qaida operatives for attacks in the kingdom in the past two years.

In Riyadh, US Embassy spokesman Carol Kalin said two local staff members were injured, but all American staffers were safe and none had been taken hostage. In Washington, a state department official said several Americans did sustain minor injuries.

The Saudi interior ministry statement said a "deviant bunch"—a reference to Islamic militants—threw explosives at the gate of the consulate, then entered. Saudi security forces killed "three aggressors, and two were captured after they were hit," it said.

A Saudi official said the attackers took several hostages, mostly Sudanese and Indian, just inside a gate at the consulate where people come to get their visas.

The compound is surrounded by walls at least 3 meters high and topped with barbed wire.

Saudi security officials said the assailants shot at security guards at the consulate's gate, then set off an explosion—using either a car bomb or grenades—and then got into the compound.

Iraq president says poll doable despite violence

BAGHDAD—Iraq's interim President Ghazi al-Yawar insisted that crucial elections would go ahead as planned next month despite a sharp upsurge in deadly insurgent attacks that claimed more than 90 lives in three days.

At least 21 people were killed in a string of attacks on Sunday alone, shattering a period of relative calm that followed US-led assaults on Sunni Muslim rebel-held cities.

In Washington, Yawar insisted the vote could be held on Jan. 30 as planned if the international community provided sufficient support.

"We are asking the United Nations, the whole international community, to help us," Yawar told NBC television. "We do not think that postponing elections or delaying it will solve the problem."

Yawar was to meet with US President George W. Bush on Monday to discuss Iraq's future, especially security issues and relations with the United States, which is planning to boost troop numbers to 150,000 for the elections.

Prime Minister Iyad Allawi, meanwhile, was due in Moscow for the first time since taking office six months ago in the hope of soothing tensions over Russia's opposition to the US-led war.

A senior UN official had warned at the weekend that elections could not be held in the current climate of violence, backing calls by Sunni Muslim politicians in Iraq.

Lakhdar Brahimi, a special advisor to UN Secretary General Kofi Annan and until recently UN envoy in Iraq, said the Jan. 30 vote could only take place "if first and foremost security improves."

By early January, the United States is to increase the number of troops to about 150,000 from 138,000, the highest number since it declared an end to major combat in Iraq. The aim is to ensure the election process runs smoothly.

The weekend attacks mainly members of the Iraqi security forces, the US-led forces and their allies.

On Sunday, 17 Iraqis working for the US military in Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit were killed when men in two pick-up trucks raked their minibuses with a hail of bullets, while three Iraqi national guardsmen, including a regional commander, were killed in a car bombing near the oil refinery town of Baiji, north of Tikrit.

At least six US troops also killed in attacks over three days, including two Marines killed on Friday in the restive western Al-Anbar province, where Falluja and Ramadi are located, the US military said Monday.

And in the battle-scarred city of Falluja, the Iraqi Red Crescent said the US military had asked them to withdraw "for security reasons" until further notice.

The US military said the IRC itself had decided to leave and requested a military escort out of the former rebel stronghold, where US and Iraqi forces "continue to conduct security operations so Falluja residents can return to a safe city."

Ukraine leader rejects election reform demands

KIEV—Ukraine's outgoing President Leonid Kuchma on Monday rejected reforming the country's flawed election laws on terms set by the opposition ahead of a re-run of the ex-Soviet state's rigged vote later this month.

He spoke as Ukraine faced a third week of turmoil after presidential hopeful Viktor Yushchenko told supporters to keep up street pressure on the Moscow-backed authorities with mass rallies and a blockade of government buildings.

The opposition, emboldened by a Supreme Court ruling that the rigged Nov. 21 election should be restarted, wants Kuchma to fire his premier—who officially won the now discredited vote—and conduct election reform before they agree to constitutional changes to curb presidential powers.

"I am ready for further steps to lift this unmotivated tension so I propose once again looking at the whole packet of bills to change the election law and on changing the constitution," Kuchma told a government meeting, forced by the protests to convene at his residence just outside the capital.

"I would be prepared to sign them into law after they are adopted."

A rowdy parliamentary session on Saturday was adjourned after pro-Yushchenko members refused to vote on the two issues in a single vote.

The opposition says it will curb presidential powers after the Dec. 26 election. It says the bill before parliament on Saturday had been an attempt to neuter the post ahead of Yushchenko's likely victory.

On Sunday Yushchenko told tens of thousands of supporters who have massed in the center of Kiev for two weeks not to lift a blockade of government offices until Kuchma fired Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich and took steps to ensure a fair vote.

As both sides in the conflict ratcheted up the pressure, the presidents of Poland and Lithuania and a top official from Russia were expected in Kiev for fresh mediation attempts.

With Russia and the West at odds over the crisis, it was not clear what the respective aims of the mediators were.

Nor was it certain that Yushchenko, a Western-leaning liberal who now holds the initiative in the crisis, would meet them along with Kuchma and Yanukovich.

Indonesia urges all faiths to rise up vs terror

YOGYAKARTA, Indonesia—President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono of Indonesia, the world's most populous Muslim nation, called on all religions on Monday to rise up against terrorism and show that faith could be a force for peace.

The former general, who took power in October, made the comments at the opening of an international religious conference aimed at sending a message of moderation in the region's battle against violent religious radicalism.

Participants from 13 countries ranged from Buddhist monks in orange robes to Muslim muftis and Catholic cardinals. Jews, Protestants, Hindus and Confucianists were also on hand.

But one key regional player, Malaysia, was absent as the meeting opened, and organizers said not to expect too much too soon from the two-day meeting, despite Yudhoyono's ringing words.

"We should rise up and demonstrate that religion is a force for peace," he said after prayers by religious leaders from 10 different faiths in the ancient royal capital of Yogyakarta in Indonesia's Muslim heartland.

"To my mind, terrorism today must be regarded as the enemy of all religions. In the end the forces of light, reason and hope must overpower the forces of darkness, despair and violence."

Indonesia has been hit in recent years by clashes between Christians and Muslims and by a series of bloody bombings blamed on Jemaah Islamiah, a Southeast Asian militant Islamic group linked to al-Qaida and blamed for attacks throughout the region.

The deadliest blasts ripped through nightclubs on the resort island of Bali in October 2002, killing 202 people.

Australian Foreign Minister Alexander Downer and Indonesian counterpart Hassan Wirajuda are co-hosting the International Dialogue on Interfaith Cooperation, organized by the foreign ministries of the two countries and Indonesia's second-largest Muslim organization, Muhammadiyah.

YUDHOYONO

"A terrible perversion of religion, with a violent face, threatens moderate believers and moderate states in both the East and the West," Downer said in a speech at the opening.

Australian tourists were the main victims of the Bali blasts, while in September of this year a car bomb attack outside the country's embassy in Jakarta killed 10 people.

More than 100 religious and community leaders and interfaith experts from Australia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, East Timor and members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations are delegates at the forum, held at a luxury hotel resort.

In Southeast Asia the predominantly Christian Philippines has been fighting Islamic rebels for decades, while largely Buddhist Thailand is struggling to cope with an increasingly restive and violent Muslim minority.

But no delegates from Asean member Malaysia, a Muslim country whose nationals have been among the leaders of violent militant groups like Jemaah Islamiah, were present as the meeting opened. Organizers said their absence was a surprise and expressed hope they might still show up.

And while Yudhoyono and the foreign ministers condemned terrorism repeatedly in their talks, Muhammadiyah chairman Syafi Ma'arif's speech did not use the word, although it endorsed religious harmony and tolerance and interfaith efforts for peace.

The 30-million strong group's deputy head, Din Syamsuddin, told reporters the conference aimed not just to fight terrorism, but also a host of ills, from poverty to ignorance and HIV AIDS.

Yudhoyono said he hoped there would be a "move toward the establishment of a permanent forum" including more countries.

Downer said he did not necessarily anticipate a strong, specific joint statement from the meeting, but the start of a process.

"I think just the one meeting is going to have relatively limited impact," he said. Reuters

45M kids may die because of broken pledges, Oxfam says

LONDON—About 45 million children around the world will die in the next decade because rich countries have failed to meet their aid promises, humanitarian agency Oxfam said on Monday.

"The world's poorest children are paying for rich countries' policies on aid and debt with their lives," said Oxfam director Barbara Stocking.

In a report titled "Paying the Price," the British aid agency said countries like United States, Germany and Japan had reneged on pledges made in 1970 to make available 0.7 percent of their gross national income (GNI) in aid and as a result up to 45 million children would die by 2015.

"Thirty-four years on none of the G8 members have reached this target and many have not even set a timetable," it said.

The aid budgets of rich nations are half what they were in 1960, Oxfam said, while poor countries are having to cough up $100 million a day in debt repayments.

"For rich countries this is not about charity—it is about justice," Stocking said. "As rich countries get richer, they're giving less and less. This is a scandal that must stop."

British Prime Minister Tony Blair has pledged to put the environment and Africa at the top of the agenda for the year Britain is head of the G8 group of industrialized nations.

Oxfam has urged him to use that time to correct the critical imbalance.

"Oxfam is calling British Prime Minister Tony Blair to use all his negotiating power in 2005 to deliver a global deal that cancels poor countries' debt and doubles aid, alongside action to deliver trade justice and make trade fair," it said.

The United Nations is committed to halving world poverty by 2015, but to date is making painfully slow progress toward that goal.

Oxfam said the United States was giving just 0.14 percent of GNI in aid—one-tenth of what it spent on invading Iraq—and much aid from the European Union arrived a year late.

It said US aid would not hit the target to halve world poverty until 2040, and Germany would not hit it until 2087.

Japan was actually cutting its aid budget.

The report comes as the United Nations children's rights organization Unicef prepares to release its annual report on the state of the world's children on Thursday and as a leading medical journal accused it of misdirecting its efforts. Reuters

Australian mother who drowned baby avoids prison term

MELBOURNE, Australia—A mother who drowned her 5-week-old baby while suffering postnatal depression was spared of a prison sentence Monday after an Australian judge said her case called for mercy.

Judge Murray Kellam told the Victoria state Supreme Court in the state capital Melbourne the community's interests would not be served by sending 32-year-old Leanne Michelle Azzopadi to prison, after she pleaded guilty to infanticide.

Instead, he released her with an order to be supervised by a prison department official for 18 months, and to continue to receive psychiatric treatment.

The court heard that baby Hayley Jade Azzopadi was found floating in the bath at the family home in Melbourne on July 18 last year.

Kellam said Azzopadi had invented a story about an armed man breaking into her home, binding and gagging her, then drowning her child. But she later made a full confession.

Her lawyer, Duncan Allen, told the court Monday she killed her child while she was mentally unbalanced. She was depressed, exhausted and "plagued by an oppressive sense of hopelessness," Allen said.

"This is a case which calls for a merciful disposition," the judge said.

Azzopadi separated from her husband after the killing. AP

At 35, princess decides to wed

TOKYO—Still single at age 35, Princess Sayako was an icon for the generation of young Japanese women who, despite being ignominiously cast into the "loser" category, have not married.

But next year, Sayako, the daughter of Emperor Akihito, will marry Yoshiki Kuroda, a 39-year-old employee in the Tokyo government's city planning department. When news of the engagement was leaked recently, it brought cheers from Japanese who had watched her reply, on her birthday every April 18, that, no, she was not getting married yet.

Her engagement reflected the choices Japanese women are increasingly making, but it also underlined enduring social restrictions. After her wedding, the princess, unlike her older brothers, will have to leave the royal family and become a commoner, in keeping with the tradition of brides joining their husbands' households. Her children will have no rights of succession to the Japanese throne.

Still, her choice was applauded by women here.

"She's wonderful because she has waited until she became 35 years old and then found the best person at the best time for her," said Yuko Matsumoto, an author who writes about social and gender issues. "I assume that she had been pressured to marry when she was 25 or 30 years old."

Indeed, the princess, back in her 20s, was presented with many potential candidates, according to the Japanese news media. But nothing clicked. She chose instead to lead the unusual life of a bachelorette princess, engaging in her official duties and pursuing her interests in ornithology. (The kingfisher was of particular interest.)

Taming typhoons

"It (Hurricane Isabelle) reminds me of Cleopatra... Really pretty, but kind of sinister."—American scientist Hugh Willoughby while admiring a swirling blue-gray satellite image of "Isabelle" which killed 17 and caused billions of dollars in damage in September 2003.

VIEWED from the top or in satellite images, typhoons, the Pacific counterparts of North America's hurricanes, may truly be beautiful, but they certainly are very deadly and destructive. The typhoon is one of nature's most awesome meteorological phenomena.

Filipinos are very familiar with the death and destruction caused by typhoons. Because the Philippines lies right smack in their path, Filipinos have almost become inured to seeing 20 to 25 tropical storms hit the country every year. They've become so accustomed to typhoons that sometimes they fail to adequately prepare for it.

But we have to think seriously about typhoons and how they can be deflected or moderated. And how can we cope with the awesome, elemental forces of nature? Sometime ago, before martial law, a congressman introduced a measure that became popularly known as "a bill seeking to abolish typhoons." It was laughed at in public forums and laughed out of Congress. Actually, it had a serious intention: it sought to start studies to mitigate the effects of typhoons.

Now weather modification, and specifically the deflection or moderation of hurricanes and tropical storms, is the object of serious scientific studies. One of those engaged in such studies is American scientist Hugh Willoughby. He believes hurricane mitigation represents the next frontier of knowledge in meteorology. Forecasting is already far more sophisticated than it was 20 years ago.

The immediate challenge is preparing for hurricanes and trying to minimize devastation. Researchers have discovered that some simple adjustments like planting certain trees and using certain nails in construction can make a big difference in the level of damage caused by a hurricane.

Another researcher, Ross N. Hoffman, and his team are investigating how they could nudge hurricanes into more benign paths or otherwise defuse them. Successful computer simulations of hurricanes carried out the past few years suggest that modification could some day be feasible, he said.

In one experiment, Project Stormfury, researchers tried to tame hurricanes using cloud-seeding techniques which at that time (the 1960s) was the only practical way to affect weather. The project sought to slow the development of a hurricane by augmenting precipitation in the first rain band outside the eye wall—the ring of clouds and highwinds that encircle the eye of the storm. The Stormfury results were at best ambiguous and similar experiments have not been tried since.

What makes the research into hurricanes and typhoons very difficult is their high degree of unpredictability. The atmosphere's great sensitivity to tiny influences and the rapid compounding of small errors in weather-forecasting models are what make long-range forecasting (more than five days in advance) extremely difficult. We all know how imperfect weather forecasts are.

Still, the application of chaos theory and the use of computer simulation may yet offer hope that some day weather modification, and particularly the mitigation of the fury of typhoons, may become a reality. (A chaotic system is one that appears to behave randomly but is in fact governed by rules, Hoffman says.)

The Philippines is one of several countries that would benefit greatly from typhoon mitigation research. In the past 10 years, 4,274 persons have been killed, 7,602 injured and about 3 million left homeless by typhoons. These storms have caused almost P70 billion in damage to public and private property and crops.

Bicol and Eastern Visayas, which lie directly in the path of typhoons, are among our poorest regions. The government and the people seem to be engaged forever in a Sisyphean struggle in these areas: this year they repair the damage caused by typhoons to infrastructure and the following year they are destroyed again by even more powerful storms.

Typhoons are a great and recurring obstacle to the country's economic development. Academic and scientific institutions and Congress would be doing the country a lot of good if they could convince other countries that experience a lot of typhoons and hurricanes, like the United States, Japan, Taiwan and Hong Kong, to undertake a joint research on the taming of these terrible, awesome and destructive giants of nature.

A bitter-sweet carol

VIEWPOINT

Juan L. Mercado

call this joy-laced pain "chiaroscuro." Among others, injustice evokes that feeling.

"The books of antiquity of every people and culture are filled with that restless human search," the theologian Catalino Arevalo notes. "One thinks of the words from Aeschylus which Robert Kennedy loved: 'And even in our sleep, pain that cannot forget falls drop by drop upon the heart.'"

Did that Christmas group include Filipino United Nations officers like the economist Edmundo Prandilla of Davao and Bohol's Ernesto Pernia, later Asian Development Bank economist? I don't recall now. But Dr. Jose Abueva, by then, had moved on to the United Nations University in Tokyo. He was later to become University of the Philippines president.

That Christmas, his international vessel docked at Klong Toey. So, Capt. Anston Roxas was there together with his wife, Justa, principal of Bangkok's Mary Poppins kindergarten. So were engineer Noel Bersabe and his physician-wife, Jing.

"It's the supremest of ironies in a country that boasts of the longest celebration of Christmas," editor Julie Yap Daza wrote in 1978 "But not a trace of effort has been made to attribute the beloved carol 'Ang Pasko Ay Sumapit' to its author Vicente D. Rubi."

When Daza wrote that, Rubi was an old impoverished widower. Until he was confined in a hospital ward, "Nong Inting" would shuffle to his door to teach startled carolers, sometimes kids banging tin-cup tambourines, how to sing his dayegon.

Rubi and Veril's carol had been hijacked for P150 by a record company. Nong Inting, who died in 1980, was "denied what was due him in royalties," Daza added. As Shakespeare's King Lear puts it, "I am a man/More sinned against than sinning."

Record companies conned the carol's authors over the years with legal dodges. That's par for the course in a country where court verdicts on dictators and their plunder are sapped by a never-ending spiral of motions. "I can delay this case for at least five years" boasted an abogado de campanilla after Edsa II.

Twenty-four years after Rubi's death, as his obituary notes, the lyricist Vestil went to his grave, also bereft of benefits and recognition—although their dayegon continues to resound, albeit in forms that Rubi and Vestil never sought. Does it ultimately matter? "I have written your name in the palm of my hand," an Advent reading from Isaiah says.

But those who crassly exploited the talented dayegon musician and lyricist have kindred spirits here: in the cartel that flogged an onerous levy on coconut farmers; in loggers who triggered those flash floods or generals who fiddled with soldiers' skunky retirement benefits. These are the "Napoleons of crime," Sir Arthur Conan Doyle muses.

In Charles Dickens' 1843 classic "A Christmas Carol," the miser Scrooge dismisses what Vestil and Rubi celebrated as "Humbug!" But Christmas is not tinsel, reindeer, shantied dieters, etc., a Bangkok Post feature noted. It is "about a Child...who healed the sick, fed the hungry, showed compassion, taught that one should lay down life for friends—and did so. He also gave answers to basic questions, such as death that confront ordinary mortal like us." That's why it is a "feast of luminous images that hunt at all manner of communion."

Christmas' unique grace is that both carol writer and carol thief can say with shepherds and kings: "Let us go to Bethlehem and see what the Lord has made known to us."

The problem is legal logging

THERE'S THE RUB

to the legal timber licensees to carry out their fringe logging and woodcutting activities.

Blaming the illegal loggers for what happened in Dingalan, Real and Infanta is like blaming the pickpockets in Cubao for the crime situation in Metro Manila. Running after the illegal loggers for the ferocious ravaging of this country is like running after the Muslims in Quiapo to solve the problem of piracy in Asia. It is selective perception of mind-boggling proportions. No, it is self-inflicted blindness.

The figures in Dingalan show so. It was the commercial loggers—completely legal ones—who razed down its forests over the past several decades. When logging was temporarily stopped in 1995, after 50 years of relentless tree-cutting, 90 percent of Dingalan's forest cover had already disappeared. It had only 2 percent of its old-growth trees left. It did not help that Dingalan Bay became the site of US-RP war games over several years, an exercise that treated ecological conservation along with imaginary terrorists as the enemy.

As Jerome Ignacio of the IRDP reports, logging in the area was revived in 2000, when Erap's goon in the DENR, Antonio Cerilles, signed a "provisional ECC" entitling Green Circle Properties and Resources to log on 27,851 hectares of land, with an annual allowable cutting volume of 22,645 cubic meters of wood from 447 hectares. This means more than 600 10-wheelers full of logs rumbling down the mountains every year. GCPR is the one company that has been responsible for stripping that place naked and by all the laws of God and men should be haled to court long ago for it.

This contravened, as Lemuel points out, an

I HEARD it in the news at the height of the storm, when Dingalan yielded up corpses on the shore, along the riverbanks and down the slopes of mountains. A congressman proposed the death penalty for illegal loggers. Illegal logging, he said, was clearly a heinous crime. The people who dealt in it deserved nothing less than execution.

Some days later, GMA herself admitted the deaths in Quezon weren't just an act of God but an act of man, and called as well for harsh punishment to be meted out to illegal loggers. What happened in Quezon happened because the trees that sucked the water in the hilltops were gone, cut off by illegal loggers. While at that, she said, the NFA was to blame for that pass. They were among, if not the chief member, of the growing tribe of illegal loggers in the area. Having lost their funding from abroad and no longer able to compel local officials and businessmen to pay "revolutionary taxes," they had resorted to illegal logging.

Illegal logging was clearly the culprit, Prospero Nograles said also. The problem lay simply in implementing our environmental laws, which are plentiful. If the authorities would only run after the illegal loggers, we would not be having problems with the environment. If only the cops and soldiers would confiscate the illegal logs coming their way, places like Real, Infanta and Dingalan would not have experienced the kind of devastation they just had.

Not at all.

Maybe the NFA has gone into illegal logging for the reasons GMA and Eduardo Ermita cite—that is not improbable. They went into counterfeiting in the 1980s, with disastrous results. But their contribution to the disappearance of the trees in this country, particularly in the Quezon and Aurora areas, is at best marginal. As is the contribution of the illegal loggers who operate in the wake of the legal ones. These are essentially small woodcutters who do not have the equipment to hew down big trees, let alone entire forests. Indeed, who often pay "royalties" (read tongs) earlier DENR study that said Dingalan would be shooting itself in the head to cut more trees, though it said this of course in more scientific language. Cerilles' order stood till last week. It was not rescinded despite the furious importuning of folk from Dingalan, who have camped out on the DENR grounds on Visayas Avenue repeatedly, led by the former bishop of the prelature, Julio Labayan, himself. And it was not rescinded until GMA beheld hundreds of bodies of men, women, and especially children, buried in the mud or floating in the sea. The product of monumental apathy and cynicism.

Illegal loggers? Wrong target, Ma'am. The criminals are perfectly legal ones.

The NFA does not have 10-wheeler trucks that pass with impunity through checkpoints, leaving behind only cigarette money for those manning them. Neither do the indigenous folk who have only their bare shoulders—they don't even have carabaoe—to haul firewood to their clearings. What implementation and law enforcement are we talking about? How can you arrest and jail people who have permits to carry out their criminal activities?

The deaths in Dingalan, Real and Infanta were not wrought by the hand of God, they were wrought by the hand of greed. We want to stop these tragedies from happening—and by God it's time we did—we stop kidding ourselves that the problem is illegal loggers. That is not the problem. The problem is the refusal of this government to recognize that this country's ecosystem, which was already fragile to begin with, has become brittle from unrelenting abuse. The problem is a corrupt government, particularly in the form of officials in the DENR, who turn criminality into rationality, who turn law into an instrument of murder. The problem is commercial logging, which remains unabated to this day, its logs raining death on those who live at the foot of the mountains in the howling wind.

The problem is not illegal loggers, it is legal loggers. The bodies of the dead should indict them to hell.

Heroes from Nakar

MALACANANG and Congress are trying to contain the horrible damage caused by illegal logging in Aurora, Quezon and Nueva Ecija and set reforms in motion, after the President suspended all logging activities. One immediate step should be to augment the security force in our fast-disappearing forests by increasing the number of forest rangers. As former Environment Secretary Heherson Alvarez stressed, the ratio is only about one forest ranger per 25 hectares of forests, and they have no means to move around. Hence the illegal loggers and the impoverished local people they enlist have free run of the forests. The dire lack of manpower to protect our remaining forests provides a good chance for our Congress members to utilize their pork barrel in a meaningful way. Let them augment the forest security forces in their own districts.

It's obvious that government alone cannot protect our forests, especially if political will is lacking. The communities have to come in and help preserve these resources for posterity. Local officials, the churches, business community, NGOs and schools have to get involved. For if the citizenry is indifferent, then unscrupulous businessmen and their political patrons will continue to have a field day.

Ennobling was the example of the 10 barangay captains of Gen. Nakar, Quezon, who hand-carried to former Environment Secretary Elisea Gozon their letter last April 27, 2004, exposing unabated illegal logging in their town. In attaching their signatures to the petition, they exposed themselves to possible reprisal from powerful vested interests. They are very much today's heroes and new anti-illegal logging czar Victor Corpus should enlist them in his team. The gallant 10 are Ariel Saynes, Samuel Borreo, Domingo Oliva, David M. Prudente, Jose Bobes, Carlito Vargas, Roberto Ritual, Fabian Villareal, Elmo Miras and Lorenzo Abordo.

Justice Artemio Panganiban penned the Dec. 1 Supreme Court decision allowing wholly foreign-owned companies to explore and develop our mining resources. Interestingly, he was one of the five justices who dissented with the majority when the Court ruled in January that foreign participation in the form of "service contracts" was illegal and struck down the Mining Law of 1995 as unconstitutional.

POLITICAL TIDBITSBelinda
Olivares-Cunanan

This is not the first time Panganiban started out as a dissenter, only to become the majority ponente by force of argument and logic. Some of the other celebrated cases he convincingly argued were those: 1) declaring the coconut levy to be public funds; 2) reserving the party-list system for the poor and marginalized; 3) reviving criminal charges against Herminio Distin in connection with the billion-dollar Bataan nuclear power plant; and 4) invalidating the Comelec automation of the elections.

When I first heard the idea of an Asian Union modeled after the European Union, I found it hard to contemplate how our region, with its diverse cultures and political systems and structures, as well as the vast disparities in economic development, could begin to absorb the concept of economic and political integration. If it was tough for Europe, it would be far tougher for Asia.

But miracles do happen. Asia was thrust into such a momentous threshold with the approval in Islamabad, Pakistan, last week by the Association of Asian Parliaments for Peace (AAPP) of Speaker Jose de Venecia's proposal to convert that body into the Asian Parliamentary Assembly (APA). If the timetable approved by the AAPP is followed, in five years' time the APA could begin to be operational. It hopes to integrate the various parliaments of Asia, from Tokyo to Istanbul, in its first serious experiment with building a common parliament, representing 60 percent of the world's population.

The triumph of De Venecia's vision could not have come at a more propitious time. For 10 years he fought for this parliamentary assembly at the Southeast Asian level. Each time he and his co-architect, Cebu Rep. Antonio Cuenco, ran into a roadblock called Singapore. At the AAPP level, however, JUV's woes did not last as long. Armed with a feasibility study jointly sponsored by the House of Representatives and the Hanns Seidel Foundation, JUV argued at the recent 5th AAPP General Assembly that "the time is ripe" for Asia to consider economic and political integration. After the assemblies in China in 2002 and in Manila in 2003, the 32 member-parliaments represented in Islamabad fully embraced his vision of integration and approved an interim secretariat to work on the APA from Manila.

JUV was quick to qualify that integration will be taken step by step, not in quantum leaps, and built according to the Asian model, even as its template will be the European experience. Launched 55 years ago, today the European Union has been expanded to 25 countries with a common currency and a constitution that's in the midst of ratification. The work of "harmonizing Asia's growing interdependence only an Asia-wide legislature, a 'true Asian parliament,' can undertake," he argued. Surprisingly, support for his vision was wide. Pakistani Premier Shaukat Aziz expressed approval when JUV called on him at Islamabad, while the incumbent AAPP president, who succeeded JUV, Pakistani Speaker Chaudhry Amir Hussain, called its approval "a great moment for Asian democracy." Cuenco summed up the RP delegation's sentiment thus: "This is a moral, political and diplomatic victory for the Philippines, for the House of Representatives and for Speaker De Venecia."

The path to APA may be long and arduous. It will need the greatest efforts of Asia's statesmen and visionaries to build it upon the greatest hopes and aspirations of the Asian peoples. But JUV should already feel good being referred to as the "architect and father" of Asian integration.

Certified Pinoy

I DO not know what bothers me more: being a Filipino or not knowing what being Filipino means. It always horrifies me to think that those Fil-Am, with their distinctive nasal twang and distorted values, could possibly be worthy of being called truly Filipino.

Somewhere I read that one is a certified Filipino if he dips his bread in coffee, cuts up the spaghetti, points at something using his mouth, is never on time and offers a lot of excuses whenever he commits a mistake. But surely, being a Filipino means more than that, doesn't it?

The Filipino has spent the past few hundred years trying to be someone other than himself. Most of us grew up believing that anything of Filipino origin is pedestrian and of poor quality. So here we are going around in our Mossimo shirts, Levis jeans and Nike shoes, strutting around with our Jansport backpacks and Sony Discmans and watching the latest foreign flicks. All the while, our fellow humans in other countries have revised their dictionaries and defined the Filipinos as "domestic helpers." Well, okay, the Oxford Dictionary denied ever having redefined the Filipinos as such. However, the fact that someone out there actually came up with that idea is upsetting enough.

But we have no one to blame but ourselves. If I were to make a list of all our disgusting traits, it would be much longer than the epic of Lam-ang. We spit whenever we feel like doing it and piss wherever we wish. We take everything personally when attention is called to our errors. We are the masters of procrastination. We are promoters of the "crab mentality." When the Japsyuki next door buys a late-model Mercedes Benz, the Hong Kong domestic helper across the street wants to have a Jaguar. We look upon overseas employment as the answer to our economic problems without thinking about the brain drain it is causing. We make a movie about the life of the young actor who passed away, and turn another star's burial into a media circus. We consider the death of a rising young star more relevant than the death of two National Artists. And yes, we made Marcos our president and let every Filipino live through a horrible nightmare.

It is difficult to list down all the things that make the Filipino the world's laughing stock. Parents would rather marry off their daughters to white, straight-nosed foreigners than pass on the dark skin and flat noses of our ancestors.

I have come to realize that defining the Filipino is up to the Filipino himself. Perhaps, it's time for us to start identifying those traits which make us Filipino.

I am Filipino. I use a kabo or tubo when bathing because, you really think about it, it saves more water. I dip my bread in juice because it tastes good. I cut up my spaghetti because it's easier to eat that way. I use my mouth to point at something because I believe it is rude to point with one's finger. I am a Filipino because my hero is Jose Rizal. I am a Filipino because I respect my elders and will never feel comfortable calling them by their first names. I am a Filipino because the bravery of Melchora Aquino and Gabriela Silang runs through my veins. I am a Filipino because Ninoy Aquino said I was worth dying for. I am a Filipino not because I was destined to be one but because I am proud of being one!

One among millions

Katrina Lim

I AM not an economist. Neither am I a great philosopher. I am a Filipino, a Filipino who has her own views about what is happening around us. I look at the papers and watch the news, and I see nothing but moral decay. I shrink into the background and play observer.

I have a very bleak view about many things. No one gives a damn about anything aside from what bothers or pleases him. Everyone is too preoccupied with one's own concerns to even bother to smile. Last week, I dozed off while waiting in a motorola, a public utility vehicle, and I was rudely awakened when a passenger bumped against me as she tried to keep her balance. I was disturbed to note that the woman across me didn't move an inch so that the other passenger could pass with ease. Even a situation as small as that showed me how we have become so selfish and so obsessed with making our lives less burdensome that we don't think of others anymore.

I know that deep inside us we know the reason for the continuing regression of our country. The reason is ourselves. I hear so many Filipinos, myself included, blaming the President, the corruption in government, and even something as absurd as local superstitions for the peso's fall. Each of us thinks that since we are just one among so many millions we won't make a difference. But what we don't get or simply refuse to see is that we are not the only ones relying on the next person; everyone is. And that adds up to a lot of problems.

Look at me, for example. I used not to give even a thought to anything that didn't concern me directly. I was selfish and self-centered (and maybe I still am). There was this veil that kept me from seeing reality, a veil that also protected me against the imperfect world that wasn't mine. I had wrong ideas about generosity and love. I thought giving away a few coins to a beggar was proof enough of my kindness. How wrong could you get?

No one would really care to listen if I say I want to make a difference in this world. That is such a cliché. But I will say it anyway: I want to make a difference.

Now I must confess that sitting inside a restaurant, chatting with friends while picking on my food doesn't feel like so much fun when I look out the window and notice a bunch of haggard-looking street children outside, begging for loose change so that they can buy their next meal. I want to stop criticizing the President and start having faith in our government officials again. I want to smile sincerely at passersby and to feel my heart lift when they return the smile. I want to hear more words of thanksgiving than complaints about having been cheated by the driver, the saleslady or the government official. And remain hopeful that all these wishes will become true someday. Then I will have proved that one Filipino among so many millions does matter.

A night on the desert

AT LARGE

across the mattress. The tents were arranged in a semi-circle, the open area likewise covered by rugs. At one end lay our roofed dining area where a bonfire mercifully blazed. At the other end was the outhouse, two chemical toilets and an improvised washstand. Welcome to the tourist version of Berber life!

We shuffled our huddled forms to the dining area for dinner, which consisted of round Moroccan bread, lentil soup, couscous and chicken, a tajine (the Moroccan cooking implement with a pointed cover that makes for excellent stews) of lamb, potatoes and carrots, and dessert of apples, oranges and the tiny, sweet oranges called clementines. All the while the Berber troupe continued to serenade us, after first putting on a show of music and energetic dancing, which could be called the Berber version of hip hop.

CHILLED to the bone, most of us headed straight for the tents and our warm beds. Over dinner, I found out that "all the Asians," meaning Zubeida Mustafa from Pakistan, Mohammad Shahjahan from Bangladesh, Ramesh Jaura who is from India but has lived for decades in Germany, and even my roommate Martha Swai from Tanzania, had decided that camping was not for them and elected to sleep in a small hotel about a kilometer away. Not knowing I had an alternative, I had ended up as the only person from a warm climate braving a night on the desert.

Hardly putting on my pajamas, layered over with whatever pieces of clothing I had brought with me, I crawled under the heavy blankets. I wondered if I should take time for my nightly rituals, but once cocooned beneath the blankets, I couldn't summon the will to jump out of them into the cold air.

I would come to regret this later in the night, as I tossed and turned and tried to cover every centimeter of raised blanket that somehow allowed fingers of cold to come creeping in. I also had to pee—desperately. When I couldn't stand it any longer, I said to hell with it and threw the warm covers off me. It was three in the morning, and, armed with a flashlight and a full bladder, I sped across the rug-covered ground. Were those sinister cats lining the path to the outhouse? No, they were Moroccan lamps, which had been lit to guide our way but were now dark, cat-like shapes.

AT DAWN, I found the other occupants of our tent had all signed up for the camel ride to the highest dunes to catch the sunrise. Ever since a traumatic horse ride in my childhood, I have shunned getting aboard any animal taller than me, but I did want to have a picture taken with a camel.

The camels were simply marvelous, placid and regal, and bore their burdens with a quiet dignity. "Madam from the Philippines, are you afraid of camels?" inquired a Berber guide. "Yes! I am afraid!" I replied, setting him off on a torrent of amused guffaws.

Those of us who stayed behind contented ourselves with viewing the sunrise on a dune beside the encampment, catching our breath as the sunlight sent shadows chasing across the undulating sand. As we shivered in the bitter cold morning air, the same Berber murmured: "You feel cold? But it is only for one night. I have lived here all my life! That must have been his bid for sympathy, because he later tried to sell us overpriced fossils.

When the camel riders returned, they were just in time for our Berber breakfast of bread and fried Moroccan pancakes (closely resembling chapattis) taken with fragrant honey. We all agreed it was truly a once-in-a-lifetime experience. I have spent a night on the desert, and while I'll never forget it, it's something I have no wish of doing again.

How a nation progresses

HOW does a nation progress? Certainly not by turning a blind eye to illegal activities that result in the deaths of thousands of Filipinos. Not only is this not the first time (remember Leyte?) but we all seem to know it won't be the last either. No, a nation doesn't progress when one percent of the population is affluent and the majority is mired in poverty—let me correct that: not just poverty, abject misery. What was that idiosyncratic item about Filipinos being the happiest people around? Well, y'all this is what it's gotten us: a group living off the fat of the land and the rest dying in misery.

Am I angry? Yes, I am, simply because this latest calamity should not have happened (again, and again and again). Granted we get the government we deserve and our leaders merely reflect us ("Cristo, manawa ka."). It's not like we don't know that there is a need for discipline, a re-orientation of values and attitudes, but, and I maintain, unless the leaders show the way it isn't going to happen. Would you say that Lee Kwan Yew put the interests of his nation ahead of his own? Would you describe him as a visionary leader who prodded his nation to progress? Now internalize and ask yourself who among our leaders displayed these qualities?

A friend of mine claims that a nation's progress depends on human behavior (when people's attitudes turn into action), the quality of leadership and the nation's natural resources. We can always excuse ourselves and state that ours are nearly depleted (guess who's to blame), but how to defend that excuse against Israel's achievement of making the desert bloom?

Doesn't it drive you up the wall to think that in a democracy (if you accept that we've got one) "elected leadership reflects what the people themselves habitually practice or tolerate"? And wow, are we gluttons for punishment! My friend further avers that the greatest obstacles to economic progress are non-economic in nature and depends on how people behave. There are attitudes conducive to progress and by the looks of it we ain't got them. My friend quotes Gunnar Myrdal in his "Asian Drama" where "modernizing ideals" are listed. These are preconditions before a developing nation can grow:

SENSE AND SENSIBILITY

Bambi L. Harper

Frugality
Diligence Efficiency
Orderliness
Punctuality Competitiveness
Scrupulous honesty
Energetic enterprise
Maximum self-reliance
Preparedness for change
Spirit of cooperativeness
Alertness to opportunities
Rational decision-making process
Organic, step-by-step development
Taking the long-term point of view
Being Christians (or so we keep claiming although evidence is mounting that it's one of those "pakitang tao" of ours), we're suppose to add godliness and compassion to that list, or so our Catholic education was supposed to imbue in us. So excuse me while I roll my eyes and remember the latest man-made tragedy in Quezon Province and all the poor who perish yearly in those overcrowded sea-going coffins or even the people who live under the bridges along South Super-slow-way (among other calamities, despite an atrocious national debt our infrastructure sucks).

And speaking of Christians, in the Nov. 29 issue of BusinessWeek, the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University in a study discovered that 59 percent of all philanthropic dollars in the US are contributed by families with household incomes of $100,000 or less (i.e. lower and middle-income Americans). For instance, a man who lives on $10,000 a year that he earns from shining shoes has contributed $90,000 over the course of many years to the Free Care Fund at the hospital of Pittsburgh. One could hope that some of those dollars from the conversion funds went to charity, but you know, somehow, I doubt it.

Eduardo Lachica has written that, "except for the brief life of the Commonwealth the Philippines didn't have a bureaucracy strong enough to fight off the rent-seekers or able to guide the economy Japanese-style to prosperity." At that time the bureaucracy was run smoothly and effectively by middle-class technocrats with middle-class values which they absorbed while earning their US degrees as pensionados. Maybe we should ask the Americans to take some more Filipinos to study in the US. The problem is, will they return or end up "making TNT," as they say? Well, people, in the end, it's up to us. Should we adhere to the values that Gunnar Myrdal proposed? Do we zealously hold to account public servants who violate these tenets? (How's Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia doing, by the way?)

Let me quote Ben Sanchez's comment here: "Let us not forget the fundamental lesson derived from the economic progress achieved by other developing countries. Economic progress means economic change. And economic change requires changed behavior. Otherwise, a nation perishes."

(ES. Let's hear it from readers out there. List down the inimical habits we have that are opposed to the modernizing ideals mentioned above. Should keep us laughing till the New Year).

Hacienda Luisita: a human rights violation

WALA kaming perang pambili ng bigas sa sakod na siyam na piso, bibili pa ba kami ng tear gas at baril? Kung may baril kami, bakit walang patay sa militar? (We have no money to buy rice with only P9 in hand, how can we afford to buy tear gas and guns? If we had guns, why was there no military casualty?)

We have heard this from the poor victims of the Nov. 16 Hacienda Luisita Massacre in response to accusations that they were responsible for the deaths of at least seven of their fellow striking workers and sympathizers. In this tragedy, the unjust system of "land ownership monopoly" reared its ugly head once again as the legitimate demands of poverty-stricken workers were met with barbaric attacks by police and military forces.

Over the years, peasants have remained poor and landless while big foreign corporations and the local ruling elite, such as the Aquino-Cojuangco and Arroyos, continue to monopolize the ownership of vast tracts of land in the country.

In observance of International Human Rights Day on Dec. 10, we remind the Philippine government that, being a signatory to the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UNUDHR), it is directly accountable for every Filipino life that is lost to brutal killings, hunger, landlessness and other miseries negating the values of human rights and dignity.

Under the Arroyo administration, the incidence of human rights violations has been rising. Among the violations are: its failure to secure the people's socio-economic rights to land, shelter, just wages, job security, education, health and other basic social services; failure to uphold civil liberties as seen in its "no-permit, no-rally policy" and its record of violent dispersal of rallies; its failure to render justice to thousands of human rights victims under the Marcos dictatorship; its record-high attacks against activists; its massive displacement of civilians by its all-out war policy; and its military offensives in the name of the war on terror.

Meanwhile, the highest officials, who swore to serve the people, engage in corruption and plunder in cahoots with the foreign and local elite.

We cry out for justice for the Hacienda Luisita Massacre victims and all human rights victims. We demand that the government stop reducing the UN-UDHR and other human rights instruments into mere scraps of papers.

Narrow-minded and malicious imputations

IT is extremely narrow-minded and malicious for the Cojuangco family and the government to accuse sympathizers of strikes—such as the one that was held in Hacienda Luisita—of participating just to stir up trouble.

Families of striking workers, students, professionals and others support and join strikes because it is legitimate and just for workers to air their grievances and to show their organized strength when needed. However, workers are subjected to unequal treatment under current laws as exemplified by the violent Hacienda Luisita incident last Nov. 16. It is therefore only right, if not necessary, to give concrete support to legitimate workers' actions. Such support may be expressed by going to the strike area and integrating with the workers.

We thus condemn the violence perpetrated by the Philippine National Police, the Armed Forces of the Philippines, the Arroyo administration, and the butchers of Tarlac. Only genuine agrarian reform and national industrialization will bring long-term development to our people—in this the government has failed miserably. Instead of working for the people's welfare—like addressing the demands of the Luisita workers—the government has come up with policies that have directly resulted in high electricity rates, rising gasoline prices and dwindling wages.

One question burns in my mind: When the state answers the legitimate demands of people with bullets, what is left for them to do?

Most 'user-friendly' government agency

EARLIER this year, a Social Weather Stations survey named the Securities and Exchange Commission the "most sincere" government agency (in fighting corruption). From my own experience with the SEC, I can say that it is also the "most user-friendly" government agency. I am particularly impressed with—and grateful to—the Public Assistance team that very willingly and patiently helped with even the most complicated inquiries. To top it all, the SEC premises are neat and orderly: there are no vendors and bistambays in the lobbies; people actually line up for elevator rides and the comfort rooms, are truly for one's comfort.

I hope that under its new management, the SEC will continue its excellent service to the public.

Shame as value

THE FRONT PAGES are a picture of the country's ambivalent moral landscape. There are the photos of jubilant members of the Nayan family carrying placards with messages of gratitude and joy; then there are the picture and story of this year's valedictorian of the Philippine Military Academy, 2nd Lt. Rolly Joaquin, who was sent home from the US Army Infantry School at Fort Benning, Georgia after being caught shoplifting. The promising PMA graduate had closed his valedictory address with the promise, "The P2.1 million you spent for each of us will not be wasted." (PDI, 11/24/04)

Mr. Joaquin is so young and already so dishonest and learning fast to become like many of his seniors in the military. Perhaps Mr. Joaquin and Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia can share quarters even for a few weeks if only to share an important sentiment: Shame. More importantly, the two gentlemen can learn to recover lost moral fiber.

The carnage at Hacienda Luisita is shameful and the behavior of some people in its aftermath is disgustingly shameless. Winston Garcia of GSIS shamelessly drives his luxury cars and lives in his luxury houses. Gen. Angelo Reyes was not ashamed to say his money is really his mother's. Bro. Mike Velarde of El Shaddai recently received a P359-million loan from Pag-ibig for a project to build "mansions." He, too, is not ashamed. The list, I am afraid, is rather long.

Whatever happened to the Presidential Commission on Values Formation (PCVF)? May I request the PCVF to get to work right away. Can it address this disturbing phenomenon of shamelessness?

The path out of the fiscal crisis is moral. The President had something good going when she created the PCVF. This is the time to activate it when scandal haunts our national institutions and our leaders. I suggest that the PCVF revive the post-war program of Good Manners and Right Conduct; however, let it be a new program with the following components: Moral Governance and Right Conscience (MGRCC). May I likewise suggest we go through this with little or no talk, just good example and genuine sacrifice. Let us begin with the President herself. Let her give up her pork barrel. Use it for the people's basic needs: food, medicine, housing and livelihood. This is morality: to do good and make sacrifices for the people. This is governance: to lead by example, not by words but by deeds. This is right conscience: to listen to God and not to party, family, friends and benefactors. Erap said this at the beginning of his term: Walang kama-kamay-anak, kai-kabigan. If only Erap had kept his word.

Political demolition job vs Javier

I WAS taken aback by the mad outburst of Juan Jose Rodom T. Fetiza in his letter, "After Javier case, Antique must move on." (PDI, 11/20/04)

It was supposed to be a reaction to the column of Conrado de Quiros, which decried Gov. Salvacion Z. Perez's advice to the people of Antique to respect and accept the "the court's verdict" finding Arturo Pacificador innocent of murdering Evelio Javier.

Petiza, however, went beyond the issue raised by De Quiros' column to besmirch my name and blame me for Pacificador's acquittal. Fetiza's tirade was unnecessary, baseless and maliciously calculated for political demolition.

Yes, I might have been voted into office to find justice. But our search for justice must always be under the rule of law. There were courts of justice to decide the innocence or guilt of the perpetrators in the murders of Ninoy Aquino and Evelio Javier. Like President Aquino, I never used my power to deny the accused their right to a fair trial or to influence the court's decision. Justice does not depend on who wields power. What Fetiza is asking me to do is to make a travesty of the rule of law and justice.

De Quiros' perception reflects the sentiments of our family and we appreciate him for that. We cannot accept the judgment of acquittal. We dispute the judge's appreciation of the evidence. Like our lawyer and prosecuting fiscal, we believe that the evidence was complete and more than good enough to convict all the accused, including Pacificador in the murder of Evelio. In fact, this was the evidence on which the court based its denial of Pacificador's petition for bail. However, we have to respect the decision for whatever it is worth, because we have to abide by the rule of law. Just as in Ninoy's case, the mastermind escaped conviction for Evelio's murder.

How then did Fetiza arrive at the conclusion that I neglected the case, specifically the gathering of evidence? During the trial, I never heard, much less saw Fetiza showing any interest in the outcome of the trial. How can he claim to be knowledgeable about the case?

Contrary to the allegations of Fetiza, I was in the case every step of the trial, marshaling the witnesses, ensuring that the physical evidence was available, conferring with our lawyer and the prosecuting fiscal, etc.

As to the alleged support of the Zaldivar family for Evelio, Fetiza should ask Gideon Javier. I'm sure Evelio's son has a lot to say about Perez and the Zaldivars.

Overseas jobs for surplus Filipino labor

I TOTALLY disagree with Sen. Juan Flavier's view that the cause of our poverty is overpopulation. If the good senator opened his eyes wider, he would see that the monster behind the hunger and poverty of millions of Filipinos is corruption—corruption among our politicians who during election campaigns present themselves as "servants of the people" but once elected behave like "kings," who have all the right to dip into public funds for their personal use.

Wouldn't Flavier be happy to have Filipinos in other countries and, in the future, see the citizens in those countries with Filipino blood in their veins?

As a government official, Flavier should instead help arrest unemployment by working out a program that would help our surplus labor find jobs abroad. For example, he could work to make the processing of the papers of would-be overseas Filipino workers free. And he could as well help that job placements abroad are negotiated government-to-government instead of through agencies.

By sending our surplus labor abroad, unemployment will be reduced, if not totally solved, thus benefiting our economy as well. It is common knowledge that our economy is now being sustained by dollar remittances.

Flavier should beware of the propaganda from the First World countries—particularly the United States—which believe that to control world resources they must control world population.

8 cultists sued for illegal gun possession

By Jhumnex Napallacan
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—Police yesterday filed charges against eight members of the Philippine Benevolent Missionaries Association (PBMA), headed by cult leader Ruben Ecleo Jr., who were allegedly caught carrying high-powered firearms in a checkpoint on Friday.

The complaint of illegal possession of firearms was filed at the Lapulapu City Prosecutor's Office on Mactan Island, Cebu.

They were Nestor Carrol, 34; MSgt. Hercleo Rallestan, 48; Arjuly Teimbrevilla Galiarda, 30;

Richard Caballero, 31, Rosalito Oaper, 27; Michael Baylon, 29; Elpidio Amarila, 56 and his cousin Damiano, 37.

Carrol was reportedly a member of the close-in security of Surigao del Norte Rep. Glenda Ecleo, mother of the PBMA "supreme master."

Orlando Salazar, Ecleo's lawyer, said he could not confirm the report because he had not seen Carrol in person because he was still in Manila.

But Niño Bacolod, Ecleo's brother-in-law, confirmed that Carrol was the congresswoman's close-in bodyguard and a member of the White Eagle Squad, which provides security to PBMA officials.

Carrol and seven others were arrested on Friday in a police checkpoint at Sitio Buaya, Lapulapu. Found inside their van were one M-16 rifle, three baby Armatites, six rifle grenades, several pieces of ammunition, wigs, bonnets and uniforms of the Special Weapons and Tactics.

The police were verifying intelligence reports that the group was out to kill staunch critics of Ecleo, who is facing parol charges for allegedly killing his wife, Alona Bacolod.

They were Cebu City Mayor Tomas Osmeña, radio broadcaster Bobby Nalzaro and the remaining members of the Bacolod family.

Osmeña earlier blamed Ecleo for the murder of Arbet Sta. Ana-Yongco, private prosecutor in the parol case against the cult leader.

Five of the eight PBMA members had been implicated in the killing of Yongco last Oct. 11.

One witness in the Yongco murder case tagged Carrol as the one who allegedly drove the motorcycle used as a getaway vehicle of main suspect Michael Pavila, another PBMA member. PO2 Nathaniel Sta. Ana said witnesses had also seen four of these eight PBMA members near his sister's home in Barangay Zapatera a few days before she was killed.

He identified them as Rallestan, Galiarda, Amarila and Caballero.

Sta. Ana said some of these suspects even bought cigarettes at the store owned by Yongco. He said he believed that the group stalked Yongco before killing her.

Truck cargo insurance scam suspects fall in Cavite

CAMP PANTALEON GARCIA, Cavite—A businessman and a secretary of a trucking service company may spend their entire Christmas season behind bars after the Cavite police arrested them early Saturday in their Quezon City office for allegedly making up a hijacking story.

Senior Supt. Roberto Rosales, Cavite police director, identified the suspects as businessman Cresencio Paligutan, 48, his secretary Irene Sipin, 24, driver Romeo Plaza, 44, and truck helper Rosalindo Mancio.

All are residents of Mindanao Avenue, Quezon City.

Rosales said Plaza showed up at the Carmona municipal police station on Friday night and reported that five unidentified armed men flagged down the 10 wheel truck (USJ 227) that he was driving along Governor's Drive in Barangay Mabuhay at around 9 p.m.

The driver told police the gun-wielding men forcefully took the wheels from him and ordered him and his helper Mancio to alight from the vehicle.

Plaza said that they had just gone out of a metal company in General Mariano Alvarez where they picked up several crates of "unknown metal products."

Police help

Acting on his complaint, the Carmona police rushed to the crime scene and sought the help of patrol units stationed near the area.

But as the investigators asked Plaza for specific details, Rosales said the driver suddenly confessed the whole thing was a hoax.

"Before Plaza's admission, our investigators were really baffled because our units in the area did not have any record of the truck going in Cavite. The driver also could not tell where exactly the incident happened and from what company they got the metals," Rosales told the INQUIRER.

Upon further questioning, Plaza and Mancio admitted that their bosses from CP Enterprises, Paligutan and Sipin, ordered them to make up the story so they could claim money from the insurance company.

Rosales said the two likewise revealed that the supposed "hijacked truck" was inside the compound of their office in Quezon City.

Upon confirming the information, Rosales said he called up the Central Police District and arranged a joint operation to apprehend Paligutan and Sipin.

Denial

At a news conference held at this camp, Paligutan denied instructing Plaza to dupe police to collect the insurance claim for the truck's cargo, which could amount to millions of pesos.

Police knew that some unscrupulous businessmen had long been engaged in the modus operandi to collect money from insurance corporations.

Rosales said it was impossible for the police to have missed the "entry records" of the truck as they were strictly implementing the "pass card system."

It allows police to record and monitor trucks entering the province.

40 militiamen quit over pay, schedule

MIDSAYAR, North Cotabato—At least 40 paramilitary troopers resigned en masse due to poor pay and assignments outside their villages here.

Mateo Liboon, 46, leader of a Civilian Armed Forces Geographic Unit (Cafgu), led about 40 militiamen in turning over their issued Garand and M-14 rifles to the Army's 603rd Infantry Brigade officials.

Each militiaman receives a monthly allowance of P1,800 for a 15-day service as village defender.

"But this is not enough and we were told a pay hike is out of the question," said Liboon, a farmer and father to six children.

"We are deployed in other villages and towns for 15 days and the next 15 days are slated for our farm work," he said.

The sad thing, he said, was he could not leave his post in nearby towns when lawless elements attack his own village.

"Sadly, we are supposed to be village defenders but we could not defend our own barangay when it is harassed because we are deployed somewhere else," he said.

Besides, he added, they could not manage their farm lots due to conflict of schedules.

Col. Franklin del Prado, 6th Infantry Division spokesperson, played down the mass resignation claiming hundreds of interested individuals are out to take their places.

He explained that as paramilitary troopers, Liboon and his group agreed to serve not only their own municipality but the first district of North Cotabato which is composed of five towns.

Liboon said militiamen assigned to remote villages are not provided with travel allowance. "We spend our own money for food and travel," he said.

Competition for space between seaweed farms, ships becoming intense

OZAMIZ CITY—The competition for space in the narrow expanse of Panguil Bay between seaweed growers and ships calling on the local port is reaching an alarming level.

Speaking to reporters here, Capt. Rudy Verba, skipper of a passenger vessel operated by Trans Asia Shipping, said the presence of seaweed farms close to the shipping lanes poses a navigation problem.

Performing docking maneuvers is becoming difficult in an effort to avoid destroying the farms in case these are run through, Verba explained. He said this was true especially to farms near the port.

He said they were taking extra steps to prevent damage to these farms to avoid a flurry of claims for compensation which can be financially burdensome to the shipping company.

Several weeks ago, a vessel of another shipping company ran through a seaweed farm, sending its owner claiming for damage compensation.

An estimated 3,000 to 4,000 fishermen are engaged in seaweed growing around the coasts of Panguil Bay. Some 1,700 of them are from the city alone.

From near the shores, seaweed farms were driven into the deeper waters following an outbreak of white rot disease, which continues to be a mystery until now.

White rot is hardly observed among the seaweed stocks in the deep waters.

This proliferation of deep-water seaweed farms is threatening to constrict the shipping lane. Many are observed to have already encroached into the lane intended for sea transport, and several others are tended near the seaport.

These are obstructing the movement of passenger and cargo vessels that regularly call on the port here and in Tubod town in Lanao del Norte. In addition, ferryboats operate a route between here and Kolambagan town.

Seaweed growers are clamoring for the setup by the local government of a settlement mechanism where they can lodge their compensation claims for damages wrought by shipping vessels.

They said tending a seaweed farm in the deep waters requires large investments and should not be ignored.

But Verba suggested the proper delineation of the bay into areas for fishery and seaweed growing and lanes for shipping to prevent conflict.

Hemmed in by Misamis Occidental and Lanao del Norte provinces, Panguil Bay's widest expanse is about five kilometers and its deepest portion is 45 meters. Ryan D. Rosaura, PDI Mindanao Bureau

BSP tells public P5 coins in circulation are genuine

OZAMIZ CITY—Officials of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) dispelled rumors that the shiny P5 coins now in circulation are fake.

According to Ruben Badon, manager of the BSP unit here, experts at the BSP central office had determined that the samples of coins believed to be counterfeit were actually genuine.

Badon said that upon learning of the confusion, he sent a team of investigators to areas where there are reports of fake 5-peso coins.

He said it was impractical for counterfeiters to fake the 5-peso coins as the cost of making these is higher than their face value.

BSP officials met with local bankers Wednesday to discuss the matter.

Badon expressed confidence the public would now erase their doubts about the coins.

Reports of fake 5-peso coins first broke out in Iligan City early this week upon the warning of local bankers, sending mostly small income earners that usually deal in the coins to avoid it as payment tender.

Meanwhile, videoke operators expressed relief with the BSP explanation as this saves them the cost of reconfiguring their machines as a way of avoiding the supposedly fake 5-peso coins.

Mario Datulaya, a videoke assembler and maintenance technician, said the reconfiguration would cost at least P1,500, which could have been a windfall for him and just a few others who make a living out of the "crooning machine."

Datulaya said from the current five-peso pay per song, videoke operators have planned to reduce it to three pesos, hence requiring a new timing and coin detection device for one-peso coins.

When news of the fake coins broke, videoke operators felt threatened they immediately thought of ways to cope. Ryan D. Rosaura, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Cops hit for slow pace of probe of reporter's slay

BAGUIO CITY—The National Union of Journalists in the Philippines (NUJP) has asked the Cordillera police to conduct a "speedy and impartial investigation" of the killing of Kalinga journalist Stephen Omasis.

In the new memorandum of agreement they prepared two days after Omasis' body was found in a garbage bin in Tabuk, Kalinga, officials of the NUJP Baguio-Benguet chapter have not only asked the police to protect journalists from threats and violence but also to investigate

Omasis' death.

During their first provincial congress on Nov. 3, officials of the NUJP Baguio-Benguet chapter resolved to sign an agreement with the Cordillera police to ensure the protection of journalists from threats and acts of violence.

But when they learned about Omasis' death, NUJP officials said they added another provision in the agreement.

The agreement, which will be signed on Wednesday, is part of the NUJP's campaign to seek justice for Omasis and to protect the welfare of working journalists.

Omasis, 24, a staff writer of the Kalinga-based Guru Press, bore torture marks in the head and body when found in a school compound in Tabuk.

In a statement, Chief Supt. Rowland Albano, Cordillera police director, said the police had invited Ancelito Uera, 42, a pedicab driver whose vehicle was recovered from the crime scene, and Joey Patinglag, whom they described as Omasis' friend.

Arthur Allad-in, secretary general of NUJP Baguio-Benguet chapter, said they had mobilized writers and members of farmers' organizations in Kalinga to help in the investigation.

Frederick Pangsiw, a radio announcer of the Tabuk-based dzRK, said the local media were not happy with the way the investigation was going.

"The police are working very slowly. Why did they find the body six days after he was abducted?" Pangsiw told the INQUIRER.

Pangsiw said they have been launching signature campaigns in Kalinga not only to seek justice for Omasis but also to condemn his killing.

Inday Espina-Varona, NUJP national chair, said the spate of killings of journalists should also alarm the public.

"Journalists have become a target of violence because they represent a sector where people could bring their complaints," she said.

"From General Santos City to Bicol and Ilocos Norte, journalists are eating death threats for breakfast," Desiree Calusa, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Cotabato City killings alarm people, officials

COTABATO CITY—The killing here Sunday night of an Association of Barangay Captains (ABC) president from Talitay, Maguindanao and other previous slayings have brought alarm to residents and some government officials.

Police said Saidamin Midtimbang, head of the ABC in Talitay, died of gunshot wounds in the chest when one of two motorcycle-riding men fired at the victim who was driving a pickup van along Sinsuat Avenue, just in front of Notre Dame of Cotabato for Girls. His wife, seated beside him, was slightly injured in the face.

"Something must be done to stop these killings," said Undersecretary Virgilio Leyretana, chair of the Mindanao Peace and Development Fund.

He asked lawmen and local residents to help each other in pinpointing the people behind the rash of killings, "so they could be arrested and prosecuted."

Mayor Muslimin Sema described the Midtimbang assassination as a "very unfortunate" incident at a time when the victim and family members moved around without bodyguards.

The Midtimbang couple was on their way home to Don Sero Street here when waylaid by two men, believed to be members of a gun-for-hire gang. Mrs. Midtimbang got hold of her husband's pistol and fired back at the suspects, said Sema, who claimed to be related the Midtimbangs of Maguindanao.

The absence of policemen at the crime scene and the unwillingness of witnesses to testify are preventing police from solving the murder.

But newly installed Task Group Cotabato commander Col. George Lomboy was rather blunt in saying that history shows loose firearms continue to proliferate in the city, despite a drive to get rid of them. Charlie C. Señase, PDI Mindanao Bureau

THE PROVINCE of Eastern Samar will showcase today (Dec. 7) its tourism potential as the tourism department features Leyte and Samar provinces in a tourism and trade exhibit Dec. 4-15. Gov. Ben Evaradone urged Eastern Samar people who have migrated to Metro Manila to attend the affair "to appreciate the vast potential of our province in attracting local and international tourists." Evaradone in a statement asked his provincemates in Manila to "become marketing agents" for their province. # DENR defends log firms

Bunye said in a statement.

Licensed loggers, along with the illegal ones, have been blamed for the massive flooding and landslides that claimed the lives of more than a thousand people in Aurora, Quezon and Nueva Ecija.

"All allegations of logging violations will be properly investigated and we assure the public that the government will be relentless and unforgiving in pinning down those found liable for violations of law," Bunye said.

The Philippine National Police has been placed on full alert against violators of the indefinite logging suspension.

The Multi-Sectoral Action Group, a pro-environment group in Aurora and Quezon, has called on the President to cancel the permits of at least nine big logging firms operating in the two provinces. "The logging activities of these legitimate companies were the main reasons why the mountains are bald," the MSAG said Sunday.

But Defensor said that without the licensed tree cutters, forest lands were more vulnerable to illegal loggers because private companies "protect" their areas the way government-employed rangers patrol forest reserves.

Don't blame us

Asked to comment on calls for the cancellation of logging permits, he said: "If that's really the sentiment of the local residents

But when time comes after the logging concessions that used to guard the land have left and the forest is eventually denuded, don't blame us."

Defensor reiterated that the residential areas destroyed by landslides and flash floods at the height of Tropical Depression "Winnie" were far removed from the logging concession areas.

He said the logging operator nearest to any of the affected towns was Green Circle Properties and Resources, whose area covers Dingalan in Aurora and General Nakar in Quezon. But then he had already suspended Green Circle's license ahead of Malacañang's suspension order on all logging activities nationwide.

3 types of permits

Logging permits come in three forms: the timber license agreement (TLA), which was issued during the Marcos administration, integrated forest management

SEN. Jambay Madrigal inspects some of the illegally cut logs that drifted to Pampanga and were turned into lumber by Nueva Ecija-based woodcutters in Arayat town.

ment agreement (Ifma), and socialized integrated forest management agreement (Sifma). Ifmas and Sifmas began replacing the TLAs during the Aquino administration. (See "In The Know" at right.)

Data released yesterday by the Department of Environment and Natural Resources showed that the government was still honoring 14 TLAs nationwide, the last of which will expire in 2011. The TLAs cover 566,589 hectares.

Defensor said the investigation he ordered last week on the extent of illegal logging in Aurora, Quezon and Nueva Ecija would include a review of the operations of the logging concessionaires in the provinces.

The eight-member probe team that he formed will check whether the logging firms had committed acts tantamount to illegal logging. Either they had exceeded their "allowable cut" of trees or had encroached on protected areas.

Asked to comment on the perception that license holders merely used their permits as a front for illegal logging, he replied: "You cannot absolutely deny that, that's why we are validating now."

"But an Ifma is itself a business arrangement, a contract with the government. Why would a businessman risk losing it by going into illegal logging?" he said.

List of firms, owners

Of the 14 TLAs, three were issued to companies operating in Aurora and Quezon.

They are Pacific Timber Export Corp. owned by Fernando Lu (covering Dinapigue, Isabela and Dilasag, Aurora); Verdant Agroforest Development Corp. owned by Jimmy Ng (Dipaculao, Aurora, and General Nakar, Quezon); and Inter-Pacific Forest Resources Corp., formerly United Timber Licenses Inc., (also in Dipaculao and General Nakar, owner's name was not supplied).

There were a total of 200 Ifmas issued nationwide covering 219,523 ha. Of these, seven are in Aurora, four in Quezon and one in Nueva Ecija, covering 207,887 ha.

In Aurora, there are Industries Development Corp. (owned by Joselito Ong Jr.), Pacific Timber Export Corp. (Fernando Lu), San Roque Sawmill Corp. (Ching Sen Ben), Benson Realty & Development Corp. (Ben Ching); Industries Development Corp. (Joselito Ong); RCC Timber Co. Inc. (Roberto Hallare), and Toplite Lumber (Johnny Chua).

In Quezon, the Ifma holders are Guanzon Lime Development Corp. (owned by Antonio Guanzon); Tecombro Agri Development Corp.; International Hardwood Veneer Corp. of the Philippines (Carolina Young), and Sta. Cecilia Sawmills.

The lone Ifma holder in Nueva Ecija is Orientville Development Corp., the DENR said.

At least 50,000 hectares

The DENR also disclosed that 1,635 Sifmas had been issued nationwide covering 41,872 ha.

Compared with Ifmas that apply to land areas of 50,000 ha and bigger, Sifmas are for areas below 50,000 ha, according to Defensor.

Sifmas in Aurora had been issued to Nora Querijero, Roger Querijero, Rolly Andal, Franz Baroon, Ruzakdy Caberos, Rodolfo Mataba, Rolando Cabanding and the Ma. Aurora Alumni Association. The Sifmas with Nora and Roger Querijero had already been canceled.

Quezon-based Sifma holders include the Quezon Agroforest Development Foundation, People's Initiative for Forest Protection, Nakar Rainforest Development Foundation, Viva Shipping Lines Inc., Sto. Domingo Shipping Lines Inc., CDC Group International Corp., Katarawan CENR Employees Association Inc. and Bondoc Peninsula Livestock Farm and Development Inc.

At the House of Representatives, Majority Leader Prospero Nograles said a Mindanao logging firm had been wantonly cutting down trees in some 26,000 ha of forests in the boundary of Lanao del Sur and Bukidnon.

Mindanao

Nograles asked Defensor to investigate the logging activities of Timber Industries of the Philippines (Tipi), which operates in forest areas near the towns of Wao and Bumbaran.

"According to my information, they cut trees even at nighttime as if there's no tomorrow. God forbid but with this rate of logging activities in this area, the tragedy that struck the provinces of Quezon, Aurora and Nueva Ecija is not a distant reality in this particular part of Mindanao," he said.

Nograles said Tipi appeared not to be complying with the provisions of its TLA because it had been cutting down trees beyond the limits set by the government.

He said he received reports that Tipi had been transporting two to three 10-wheel trucks of timber daily with a market value of P300,000 to P400,000 per truck from the forest areas of

IN THE KNOW

Legal means for logging and forestry businesses:

Timber License Agreement refers to a privilege granted by the government to a person to use forest resources, with the exclusive right to possess and occupy them and the corresponding obligation to develop, protect and rehabilitate them according to the conditions of the agreement.

Integrated Forest Management Agreement is a production-sharing contract entered into by the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) and a qualified applicant that grants the latter the exclusive right to develop, manage, protect and utilize a specified area of forest land and forest resource for 25 years, renewable by another 25-year period, subject to conditions.

Special Private Land Timber Permit is a permit issued to a landowner specifically for the cutting, gathering and utilization of premium hardwood species, including Benguet pine, both planted and naturally grown trees.

Private Land Timber Permit is issued to a landowner for the cutting, gathering and utilization of naturally grown trees in private lands.

Forest Land Grazing Management Agreement is a production sharing agreement between a qualified person, association and/or corporation and the government to develop, manage and utilize grazing lands.

Socialized Industrial Forest Management Agreement is a contract between a natural or juridical person and the DENR, which grants the former the right to develop, utilize and manage a small tract of forest and consistent with the principle of sustainable development. FDI Research SOURCES: DENR, PNL AND PASPO WEBSITES of lights of Grandstar 2, a passing ship, owned by Quezon Rep. Rafael Nantes, which was ferrying calamity victims from Real to Mauban, came to the succor of the stricken roll-on roll-off vessel.

Brave fisherman

But the terror was not over.

While one of the boatmen was tying the rope hurled from the ship, a huge wave slammed the boat, damaging its outrigger.

One of the volunteers, Ronaldo Almeida, a fish warden from Atimonan, dove into the sea and lashed the broken outrigger.

The ship towed the distressed Grandstar 2 back to Real.

The volunteers later hitched a ride on the Philippine Navy ship DP 317 for their trip to Mauban, arriving at their destination still shaken by their ordeal.

Organized by Quezon Rep. Proceso Alcala, the mission included volunteer rescuers, environmentalists, radio enthusiasts, students and the religious.

Volunteers of Cagayan

The rescue ship was owned by Philippine Nippon Kyore Corp. It was also carrying sick and injured calamity victims who urgently need hospitalization.

Yoyong, the last of four successive cyclones to hit the country, could have also killed many people in Cagayan, but thanks to 35 volunteers, not one life was lost despite the flooding in 146 villages.

The volunteers, composed of policemen, workers and residents, put aside personal cares and waded through rising waters to rescue villagers who refused to leave their carabao or whatever little possessions they had in their

No need for mass burials, says WHO official

IT IS the living that are the most likely sources of epidemics so no need for mass burials of those who perished in the recent typhoons.

"The bodies of people who die in floods and other natural disasters do not normally pose a risk of infection and there is no need to dispose of them in mass graves," the World Health Organization said yesterday, following reports that typhoon victims in ravaged areas were being hurriedly buried.

"There is no need for such measures," said Dr. Arturo Pesisan, head of WHO's Emergency and Humanitarian Action. "Survivors, and not the dead, are more likely to be the source of disease outbreaks unless an effective strategy focused on primary health care for the survivors and their families is prioritized, including the provision of safe water and food."

Pesisan said the identification of their loved ones and the process of grieving were essential for the prompt recovery of survivors from severe stress caused by natural disasters and personal losses.

"The inability to mourn a relative can contribute to the many potential health problems associated with disasters and the difficult rehabilitation process that follows," he said.

The WHO has earmarked $20,000 to help assess the urgent health needs in affected areas and said it is on standby to supply medical kits if needed.

Flooded homes

The volunteers belonged to the Rescue 29 group and other teams of the Provincial Disaster and Coordinating Council (PDCC).

Using bamboo rafts and fiberglass boats, they crossed the roaring Cagayan River to rescue seven families in a river islet called Que-moy.

Another team responded to the appeal of 300 villagers stranded on the Abusag Bridge in Baggao town, while others moved 2,004 families in 14 villages in Alcala town to safer ground.

The volunteer teams had undergone training for rescue operations during floods, fires and earthquakes.

In some flooded villages in Quezon, the concern among rescuers and survivors was snake bites from deadly cobras.

"The Philippine cobra reared its head because they were disturbed," Social Welfare Secretary Corason Soliman said. "They (residents) found that cobras are all over General Nakar now."

Health authorities have dispatched a special team to the town with anti-venom serum, she said. Soliman said the 718 people declared missing in the wake of the cyclones were most likely dead.

This would bring the provisional death toll to about 1,300, making the cluster of cyclones the worst to hit the country in 13 years. With a report from Christine O. Avendaño banking on tourism—even if it means forfeiting Palawan's image of rustic isolation.

The 14,896-square kilometer province has strict environmental regulations and its capital city of Puerto Princesa has an ordinance banning "destructive development."

"I made a commitment not to have destructive development," says Mayor Edgardo Hagedorn. "That's in line with our focus on sustainable development—no factories, no mining, no logging."

Illegal logging and the destruction of natural forests have been blamed for the high death toll from storms that hit the country beginning late last month and resulted in landslides and floods which left more than a thousand people dead and missing in eastern Luzon.

In the aftermath of the tragedy, President Macapagal-Arroyo suspended all commercial logging and there have been calls for people in affected areas to be weaned off forest-related means of livelihood.

Palawan concentrates on tourism, agriculture and fisheries for its income and the province has much to offer tourists, both foreign and local, from the richest to those from the lower-middle class.

Hollywood stars

The wealthy and powerful, including Hollywood stars like Mariah Carey, Robert De Niro and Naomi Campbell, stay at exclusive, well-secured Palawan islands, accessible mostly through charter planes.

More modest tour groups visit the famed crocodile farm, a village populated by Vietnamese boat people and a national park with an awe-inspiring underground river.

Palawan has diverse flora and fauna, hot springs and waterfalls that have yet to be fully tapped for tourism. A marine sanctuary covering a giant coral reef and an island reserve stocked with African animals are also underutilized, says Janice Espina of 1700 Islands Travel and Tours.

It has largely been spared the brunt of the numerous typhoons and storms that hit the Philippines each year.

But the province's isolation makes Palawan's best attractions difficult to reach. Many of the best beaches, resorts, dive spots and tourist sites can be visited only by lengthy road or boat trips.

Sleepy town

Espina says the visitors may be intimidated by the rough roads and modest accommodations. Night life is subdued and even the capital Puerto Princesa has the atmosphere of a sleepy town.

There is a shortage of luxury hotel rooms and many parts of the island suffer from irregular electrical supply. Upper-class resorts install their own generators.

Tourism in Palawan suffered a major blow in May 2001 when Abu Sayyaf bandits, allegedly linked to the al-Qaida terror network, abducted 20 people, including three American tourists, from an island resort off Puerto Princesa. Two of the Americans died in Abu Sayyaf captivity, an incident which still casts a pall over tourism to the area.

Figures from the provincial tourism office show that the number of domestic and international visitors fell 8 percent to 117,516 in 2001 compared to the previous year. Visitor arrivals fell a further 3 percent to 113,829 in 2002.

Foreign arrivals were hardest hit. From 31,772 overseas visitors in 2000, the number fell to 30,808 in 2001 and dropped to 20,555 in 2002.

Elaine Leonor, general manager of Hotel Fleuris, one of Palawan's leading establishments, says that after the kidnapping there were days of zero occupancy.

"We almost closed the hotel. But then we recovered in two years," she says.

More visitors

As memories of the kidnapping faded, visitors rose 25 percent to 142,238 last year. Foreign arrivals were also up to 22,601 by 2003.

Provincial tourism officer Maribel Buni says tourist arrivals should double in five to 10 years.

Such figures may look small compared to the thousands of visitors drawn each year to Indonesia's Bali or Phuket in Thailand, but officials and local tourism leaders hope improved infrastructure will boost numbers.

"It might not be that big but in the long run, once the infrastructure is set up, we will get more tourists coming," Hagedorn says.

Among the local government's priorities are new highways that will speed up travel to tourist sites and improved airports in different parts of the island that can take more flights and larger aircraft.

A convention center has been built in Puerto Princesa at the cost of P200 million in hopes of bringing in regional conferences and sporting events.

"We're still not ready for a huge boom (in tourists). I think that's attainable in five years," says Leonor.

Fresh start for Tondo school

By Tarra V. Quismundo

ONCE divided over the issue of the privatization of their school canteen, teachers and students of a Manila public high school appear headed to a fresh start when it marks its foundation anniversary today.

Lakandula High School in Manila celebrates its 42nd foundation anniversary with the coming of its new principal.

"Of course, we are very happy," said a school teacher who had been active in protests against the privatization of their school canteen.

Between September and October, tension rose inside this public school on Padre Rada Street in Tondo as teachers and students were up in arms against former school principal Alice Blas, who had given a private manager control over the canteen.

A teachers' cooperative used to operate the canteen. Teachers said the privatization cut short the contract they had signed with the school administration.

The Department of Education is currently investigating the matter, after the Manila Division of City Schools upheld the contract as legal and sought an inquiry by the central office.

Blas had been reassigned to the Nolasco High School, although she had tried to return to Lakandula.

Yesterday, former Nolasco principal Olimpiada Camilo took over Blas' post, and met with the school community she would be administering.

"We will start anew," the teacher said, even if the privatization issue has yet to be settled.

In today's foundation anniversary, Lakandula High School would be celebrating with the theme "Lakandula High School: Towards the Road Map for Peace, Unity and Reconciliation."

Asked whether it applied to the teachers' reconciliation with Blas, a teacher said that for her, this meant reconciliation among teachers, whose friendships had soured during the height of protests against the canteen's privatization.

"All wounds would heal, but it would not happen right away."

"It would take time, but this is the beginning," she added.

STAGGERED working hours for government and private employees could solve the worsening holiday traffic, according to Metropolitan Manila Development Authority officials.

MMDA Chair Bayani Fernando yesterday met with representatives of the labor sector and government agencies to discuss the revival of the staggered working time scheme to reduce the volume of vehicles in the roads, especially during rush hour.

"According to the experience of the MMDA, a two-hour time difference between the government and private employees would be effective in solving the Christmas traffic," Fernando said.

Under the proposed scheme, government workers would be required to work from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., while private employees would be asked to report from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Fernando said that they are hoping to implement the scheme on Dec. 13 until Jan. 6.

"If found effective, we could even make the scheme permanent," Fernando said, adding that the staggered working hours would remove 30 percent of the workforce from the road.

There are around two to three million private employees and 500,000 government workers in Metro Manila.

Fernando said the agency would meet with officials of the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), Civil Service Commission (CSC), Employers Confederation of the Philippines (ECOP), Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (TUCP), representatives from the labor sector and other agencies to discuss the features and effects of the proposed scheme.

DOLE Bureau of Working Conditions Director Tess Manansala said they welcomed the MMDA's proposal to adjust the public's working hours to help ease up traffic during the Christmas season.

"This is actually a laudable move to help solve the perennial traffic problem," Manansala told reporters after an initial meeting with MMDA officials yesterday.

She added, "The labor code does not indicate that employees go to work at exactly 8 a.m."

Manansala, however, said the scheme could affect companies with three shifts and collective bargaining agreements which indicate the employees' working time.

ECOP president Rene Soriano said the scheme would also address issues on productivity and efficiency. "Traffic affects productivity because employees caught in early morning traffic tend to get tired easily," he said.

End road diggings, for now

By Margaux C. Ortiz

THE METROPOLITAN Manila Development Authority (MMDA) yesterday imposed a moratorium on road diggings this Christmas season.

MMDA Chair Bayani Fernando said that the agency has stopped issuing permits for new excavations in Metro Manila's roads to help ease up the holiday traffic.

Fernando said that with the moratorium on road diggings, which began yesterday and will end after Jan. 1, the agency hopes to ensure a smoother flow of traffic during the holidays.

"We are advising public utility companies to reschedule diggings until the New Year," Fernando said. The MMDA chair added that existing excavations should be covered with steel plate lids at once.

Fernando said that ongoing road projects could be completed during the night, after the rush hour.

Gerry Atable, who evaluates excavation permits for the MMDA, said the agency would be doubly strict in enforcing the moratorium on Edsa, from Monumento to Roxas Boulevard.

Atable said the diggings were concentrated mainly in the Guadalupe and Ayala areas in Makati City.

"The MMDA would not hesitate to confiscate materials and equipment blocking the roadways," Fernando warned. "We may even be forced to cancel the permits of violators."

Metro Manila records 7% crime drop—PNP

By Christian V. Esguerra

METRO Manila has become more peaceful midway into the holiday season.

The number of crimes in the National Capital Region dropped by 7 percent from January to November compared to the same period last year, Director Avelino Razon Jr., NCR police director, reported yesterday.

Razon attributed the significant drop to the deployment of more police officers in shopping malls, transport terminals, schools, markets, churches and other densely populated areas.

The NCRPO chief ordered greater police visibility during the Christmas season when petty crimes rise. Conspicuous in shopping malls are "Santa Cops," officers who go about their duty wearing Santa Claus hats.

Razon cited the NCRPO's contribution to the crime drop, stressing the fact that around 30,000 of his men carry no firearms. The policemen make do with guns they personally purchased or nightsticks, he said.

To address the problem, the official said he issued 500 Taurus 9 mm pistols and 14,000 rounds of ammunition to the policemen.

Officers were also told to take an annual firearms proficiency test to improve their skills. Those who fail the test were not issued guns.

Razon also ordered the conversion of vehicles used to escort top officials into patrol cars to augment the police fleet. Non-governmental organizations also donated 20 motorcycles and several bicycles to the "tourist police."

Cause-oriented groups favor NPA?

MORE than a week after New People's Army (NPA) guerrillas killed a number of government soldiers in San Rafael, Bulacan, we have yet to hear even a word of condemnation from cause-oriented groups and leftist congressmen and congresswomen.

The government soldiers were in that town on a mercy mission. They were rescuing barrio folk from rampaging floodwaters.

They were probably armed—because it's part of their uniform—but they came to the town to make peace and not wage war.

Yet, the NPA did not spare the soldiers who were carrying the flag of truce.

And what has been the reaction of civil society, cause-oriented groups, and left-leaning politicians to the ambush? Nothing!

This gives rise to the perception that, as far as cause-oriented groups are concerned, the NPA can do no wrong. If government soldiers killed NPA guerrillas, it's a violation of their human rights. If, on the other hand, the NPA killed government soldiers, "it's all right."

Retired Brig. Gen. Victor Corpus talked the other night with his adviser, lawyer Vicente Chuidian, to make plans in the drive against illegal loggers who are being blamed for the denudation of the forests of the Sierra Madre mountain range. This caused floods to rampage in several provinces in Luzon.

Corpus has been appointed an

ON TARGET

Ramon Tulfo

ti-illegal logging czar, with full backing from an angry President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Corpus should look into the people behind the illegal logging activities in Aurora, one of the most devastated provinces.

If the former military intelligence chief looks close enough, he will find Sen. Edgardo Angara and his sister, Bellaflor Angara-Castillo, as the ones indirectly responsible for the denudation of the province's forest cover.

The Angaras were probably not directly engaged in illegal logging in the province, but their inaction makes them equally culpable.

If Corpus would ask for help from Chuidian's law office in prosecuting illegal loggers, we would see a big legal battle between Chuidian and the Angaras. The senator might come to the aid of his illegal logger-friends. Both Chuidian and Senator Angara are legal luminaries.

If the airfield in Baler, Quezon, were open to commercial aircraft, private planes would now be helping ferry relief goods to stricken areas by landing at the airfield.

One commercial pilot said he had asked Senator Angara and Real town officials years ago to open the airfield to commercial aircraft. But the senator and the local officials did not heed the request. The senator was probably busy with more mundane things to grant a simple request.

Inspection of Manila biz firms stopped

By Tarra V. Quismundo

THE MANILA City government has declared a suspension of inspection visits to business establishments around the city for the entire month of December to dispel the impression that its inspectors could use the occasion to collect holiday gifts.

Manila Mayor Joselito Atienza yesterday released a memorandum addressed to the city's department heads, division chiefs, city inspectors, and all other employees ordering a halt in the inspection of business establishments in the city during the holiday season.

The order took effect on Dec. 1, and would be lifted on the first week of January, said Atienza.

"All inspectors, examiners and field personnel involved in the inspection of business establishments in Manila are hereby directed to stop, cease, desist and refrain from undertaking any inspection of any firm, company or corporation," said Atienza in a memorandum posted on bulletin boards all over City Hall.

The only exception, said the memo, would be inspections "demanded in the highest interest of public service," and upon the mayor's authorization.

Strict compliance

Atienza would have the discretion on whether or not to conduct an inspection while the memo is in effect.

Those who would disobey the order, which was marked for "strict compliance," would be "dealt with drastically," the memo added.

"We don't want anyone to think that our inspectors would make the trips not only purely for business but also to indulge in their own personal 'caroling,'" the mayor added.

"With this order, we could prevent any negative impression that could arise in Manila's business community," Atienza told the INQUIRER.

He was referring to the Christmas tradition among children making the rounds of homes in the neighborhood to sing Christmas carols in exchange for gifts or cash.

Misinterpreted gesture

Similarly, inspectors going around business establishments during the Yuletide season might be misinterpreted as being on a personal quest for Christmas gifts, said Atienza, even if they would only be performing their mandated duty.

Only after the holidays can the city's inspectors return to regular inspections, an activity that City Hall implements on business firms to check whether or not owners run their operations with the proper licenses.

Since his first term as mayor in 1998, Atienza had been working to eradicate corruption within City Hall, a job that he had said had yet to be done fully, but which he vowed to pursue in his remaining years in City Hall.

Malabon may hike permit fees

By Edison C. Tandoc Jr.

IF PLANS push through, getting a police clearance in Malabon City may soon cost 10 times more than the original fee.

Still reeling from a fiscal crisis, the Malabon City government is planning to increase local fees, hoping the amendment of the city revenue code would generate an additional P47 million in annual revenues.

The proposal seeks to increase permit fees for pedicabs, tricycles, buildings and businesses as well as fees for certifications, city treasurer Ernesto Pabustan told the INQUIRER.

Getting a police clearance for a job application, for instance, now costs P10. Under the proposed amendment, the new rate would be P100. A police clearance for a firearm license application, on the other hand, would be pegged at P500.

Fees for getting copies of birth, marriage and death certificates will also rise from P30 to P50.

Based on the proposal, annual fees for permits from the Mayor's Office will also be organized into three categories, depending on the businesses' annual income and number of employees: "small" businesses would have to pay P1,000; "medium" businesses, P3,000, and "large" businesses, P6,000.

The proposal was already sent to the City Council for approval. A public hearing is scheduled this week with the participation of other sectors.

City Hall's current fees were last updated in 1992, or more than 12 years ago, Pabustan said, adding that the local government was in dire need of additional revenues.

With the closure of the local dump in Barangay Cammon early this year, the city had turned to private haulers for its garbage disposal services.

But while the city collects a little over P5 million yearly for garbage collection, it pays P8 million every month to private haulers.

Court blocks Makati bid to own MRT stations

A MAKATI city judge yesterday issued a writ of preliminary injunction preventing the Makati City government from taking over the Metro Rail Transit property after the local government unit placed four terminals and railways on the auction block last month.

Judge Ricardo Rosario of Makati Regional Trial Court Branch 66 ordered the Makati City government to cease and desist from recording the certificate of sale in the Registry of Deeds, and from effecting the transfer of ownership of the properties to the city.

The city government had "awarded itself" the MRT properties in a public auction on Nov. 10 after the MRT allegedly failed to pay the city billions in realty taxes. City officials said the MRT, which owes the city government P1.2 billion in realty taxes from 2000 to 2004, has the highest unpaid taxes in a list of 208 real properties with tax delinquencies prepared by the city's treasury department.

The MRT is a government infrastructure exempt from real property tax, Rosario said. Margaux C. Ortiz

Ray of hope for six banned 'Fil-shams'

By June Navarro

ASI Taulava, Davonn Harp and the rest of the PBA cagers who were banished from the country for falsely claiming Filipino citizenship may be allowed to play again.

But there's a catch.

All six of them—including Rudy Hatfield, Mick Pennisi, Jon Ordonio and Alex Crisano—can rejoin the league only if they file an appeal with the Department of Justice and the agency reverses its deportation ruling.

Thus and other lenient measures were approved by the Philippine Basketball Association's board of governors in a meeting yesterday.

"In the event that their cases are reversed by the Justice department, they may re-apply for reinstatement provided that they complete the documentary requirements of the PBA," said league commissioner Noli Eala.

Meanwhile, today's scheduled game in Subic between FedEx and Alaska has been moved to Urdaneta, Pangasinan, on Thursday as the first game of a double-header.

The second match will be the Barangay Ginebra-Shell encounter originally set on the same day in Balanga, Bataan.

Aside from the six foreign-bred cagers who are facing summary deportation proceedings, the PBA will review the citizenship documents and application papers of the other 23 Fil-foreigners playing in the league.

"We want to make sure that their papers are in order and, if not, these players should make bold steps on meeting the necessary requirements," said Eala, who pegged the deadline for the completion of requirements on March 4 next year.

If the Fil-foreigners are unable to complete the papers, Eala said the players would be sanctioned by the Commissioner's Office through suspensions until such time they comply with it.

The 23 Fil-foreigners will have to complete the following requirements: DOJ confirmation, immigration recognition, authenticated birth certificates of the player and his parents, marriage certificate, and a notarized naturalization document of either his mother or father.

The league also tightened the requirement for Fil-foreigners aspiring to play in the PBA by creating another set of guidelines.

Beginning this season, an aspiring player must submit affidavits from at least three individuals attesting to his claim to Filipino citizenship.

Roach ring clinic expects big turnout

THE BOXING clinic of the man who molded Manny Pacquiao into a world boxing celebrity has been moved from the Abap Gym to the Ninoy Aquino Stadium on M. Adriatico Street, Manila to accommodate an expected big turnout.

The Philippines Sportswriters Association and lawyer-sportsman Rudy Salud, organizers of the Freddie Roach boxing clinic set tomorrow and on Thursday, are offering the event free to the public.

However, those who will attend and register with the secretariat will be divided into two groups: actual participants and ob-of the year, will deliver a lecture on the first day and also provide solutions to problems to be brought up by the participants.

Day 2 will be spent to demonstrate actual solutions to problems raised and discussed on the first day.

Top super flyweight Z Gorres will be on hand to help Roach in the demonstration of techniques.

PBL commissioner Chino Trinidad, who also helped organize the clinic, will act as master of ceremonies and assist the famous American trainer during the question-answer portion.

Roach, the 2003 trainer of the year, said there are many other Filipino fighters who could be as great as Pacquiao.

Organizers of the Roach clinic believe that spreading the gospel of championship boxing is one way of discovering and producing more Filipino world champions.

Noted sports nutritionist Sanrose Orbeta will talk on proper diet for fighters on Day 1.

A big delegation is expected from the provinces with the confirmed participation from boxing stables in Cebu, Davao, North Cotabato and Bukidnon.

For inquiries, call the PSC-POC Secretariat at 536-4722, or cell no. 0917-8351226.

Asian women's softball draws record 12 teams

WITH DEFENDING titlist China and many-time champion Japan heavily packed to meet in the finals for the fifth consecutive time, the eighth Asian Women's softball tournament opens this Sunday (Dec 12) at the Rizal ballpark featuring a record-tying 12 nations.

ANGPING

Six games, including the Philippine Blu Girls' match against lowly Thailand, make up the opening schedule of this week-long tournament that serves as the Asian eliminations for the 2007 world championship in Shanghai.

First Gentleman Mike Arroyo has been invited to make the ceremonial pitch in the company of world softball federation president Don Porter during the short, simple opening rites scheduled at 12 noon.

It will be Japan against Hong Kong at 8 a.m., China against Indonesia at 10 a.m., the Philippines against Thailand at 1 p.m., Singapore against South Korea at 3 p.m., Chinese-Taipei against India at 5 o'clock and North Korea against Malaysia at 7 p.m. in the opening games of this tournament backed by San Miguel Corp., Oishi, Boysen Paints and Burlington Socks.

China and Japan, backstopped by several players who saw action in the last Athens Olympic Games, are highly fancied to corner the first two slots for the world tournament, leaving the race for the third and last berth a close and interesting one among the Blu Girls, the Taiwanese and the North Koreans.

The Chinese have ruled this tournament with an iron hand, winning the title three straight times in a streak that started on their debut in 1987 in Tokyo.

They repeated in 1991 in Jakarta and made it three in a row with another big win in 1995 in Manila. In all three occasions, the Chinese defeated the Japanese for the title.

Japan won the inaugural tournament in 1967 in Manila, repeated in 1969 in Taipei and reigned supreme again in 1974 also in Manila, all at the expense of the famed Blu Girls.

According to the organizing Amateur Softball Association of the Philippines headed by president Harry Angping, this marks only the second time since 1967 that 12 countries will see action. In 1991 in Jakarta, 12 teams also competed.

"We're happy that all the countries we invited are coming, including the North Koreans," said Angping. "We're inviting all those who love the game of softball to come and watch the best in Asian women's softball in action."

The field has been divided into two groups of six with Japan, Chinese-Taipei, Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore and India making up Group A and China, North Korea, the Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand and Malaysia comprising Group B.

Subic SEA Games role up for discussion today

By Marc Anthony Reyes

IS Subic ready to stage the 2005 Southeast Asian Games?

The Philippine SEA Games Organizing Committee will try to clear this key issue during its meeting today with the heads of the 41 national sports associations taking part in the SEAG, and local organizers of sub-sites like Cebu City, Mandaue City, Bacolod and Subic.

While Bacolod and Cebu have already bared their initial plans, including their projected budgets, nothing has been heard from Subic which will host sailing, archery, triathlon and cycling (mountain bike and road race).

Philsoc member Red Dumuk said the local organizers will be asked to report on the status of their preparations in association with the NSAs.

"This will be a big meeting because we will finally determine which event will be held on which day," said Dumuk, who is in charge of venues and site for the meet.

Iloilo heads charge of Futsal favorites

ILOILO CITY—Iloilo survived a scare from Laguna, eked out a pulsating 7-6 win Sunday and leading the charge of the favorites at the start of the 1st PFF-adidas Futsal Championship before a huge crowd at the Iloilo Sports Complex here.

Alta Sayson and James starred for the Honggos as they netted two goals each to frustrate the Laguna booters in Group B action that thrilled the fans. Negros Occidental was even more unforgiving as it romped to a 19-2 triumph over Oriental Mindoro in Group A.

Cagayan de Oro also made its presence felt in the event organized by the Iloilo Football Association and hosted by the provincial government headed by Gov. Neil Tupas by scoring a 13-6 win over Rizal in Group B.

Cebu-Lhuillier routed Tarlac, 12-3, in Group A of the tournament also supported by WG&A SuperPerry, Aboliz, Red Ribbon and Petron.

Robert Canedo emerged as the day's best player after knocking in six goals for Negros Occidental in the four-day event, which is a combination of soccer and basketball.

WILL Granny Goose keep its winning rhythm without its leading scorer?

With injured Ton Almeda indefinitely sidelined, the Tortillos brace for a rough stand when they seek solo leadership against defending champion Magnolia-FEU Eastern University in the PBL Open Championship today at the Makati Coliseum.

Almeda, who paced the team with a 9.5 point average, dislocated his left ring finger in a recent game against ICTSI-La Salle. The 6-foot guard had keyed Granny Goose's 68-64 first round win over Magnolia-FEU by scoring 14 points.

Now, the Ice Cream Wizards are favored to avenge that defeat at 4 p.m.

But the Tortillos still remain formidable with Ardy Larong, Chico Ianete, JR Quiñahan and Alfie Grijaldo.

It's anybody's game in the Toyota Otis-Letran-Welcoat match due to their unpredictable plays in the second round.

"It's the same old problem for us, lack of consistency," said coach Louie Alas, whose Knights will gun for a repeat of their 63-52 triumph over the Paintmasters in the first round of eliminations.

Toyota Otis-Letran will also try to follow up on its 85-61 drubbing of ICTSI-La Salle, while Welcoat aims to spring back from a 93-80 loss to Montaña.

STUNNING SHUTOUT
Mariano-led Muntinlupa closes in on chess title

TAGAYTAY CITY—Sixth seed Muntinlupa City (Alabang) shocked top seed and host Tagaytay City A with 4-0 shutout in Game 1 of the two-match finals yesterday and all but clinched the 2004 National Intra-Cities and Municipalities chess team championship at the Tagaytay Sports Center here.

With the unexpected whitewash, Tagaytay needs a similar formidable 4-0 romp today in the second and final match to force a playoff with the Muntinlupa squad for the top prize of P100,000.

Just a single draw in any of the four boards secures the title for Muntinlupa, whose top two players, Grandmaster Nelson Mariano II and Fide Master Oliver Dumakiling, were assured of stints in the Singapore Open with a win in the finals by team manager Victor Ulanday.

Mariano beat fellow GM Joey Antonio, Dumakiling downed International Master Richard Bitoon and Randy Segarra and Basilio Pandan completed the sweep with wins over Jerome Balico and 11 year-old Wesley So, respectively.

It was a draw on all four boards in the battle for third and fourth places between Dasmariñas (Cavite) and Manila B.

Third seed Dasmariñas fielded IM Petronio Roca, NM Oliver Barbosa, Raymond Salcedo and Riel Abela against Manila's IM candidate Darwin Laylo, Asian Zonal champion IM Ronald Dablen, Noel Dela Cruz and Carlo Magno Rosapangan.

In the semifinals held earlier, Tagaytay ousted Dasmariñas, 3.5-0.5 and 2.5-1.5, while Muntinlupa eliminated Manila B, 2.5-1.5 and 2-2.

Tagaytay and Muntinlupa had played to a 2-2 draw in their first meeting in the eliminations.

Meanwhile, NM Edgardo Gama of Tagaytay City B and Mirabeau Maga of San Fernando City (Pampanga) were declared gold medalists on board 1 with 6 points in seven games.

MARIANO: Big victory over Antonio

The other winners were NM Ronald Llavanes of Marikina City on board 2 (6.5/7); Allan Canzonjos of Manila A on board 3 (5/6); Elias Banguiran of General Santos City on board 4 (4.5/5) and Christopher Rodriguez of Manila (Philippine Navy) on board 5 with (4.5/5).

The tournament is sponsored by Tagaytay City.

Petron beach volley grand finale Friday

JENNIFER Bohawe and Patricia Siatan, the first back-to-back winners of the Petron Ladies Beach Volleyball Tournament, going up against last leg's champions—Philippine Navy's Michelle Laborte and Cecille Tabuena.

And with the rest of the league's past winners and their runners-up entered, what have you got?

A slam-bang grand finale to determine the country's best beach volleyball queens, according to organizer Tisha Abundo, a former commissioner of the Philippine Sports Commission.

"It will surely be the beach volleyball event to end all beach volleyball events," she said. "They (past winners) are all here, all raring to strut their stuff and lay claim to the Petron crown."

The tournament is set on Dec. 10 and 11 at the state-of-the-art Cantada Sports Center.

Leading the cast of participants, aside from the Bohawe-Siatan and Laborte-Tabuena pairs, are Joyce Ann Realaza and Ronia Cyril Jaro, Lou Maranon and Sherrie Ann Garcia, Rosalina Gomez and Joy Mijares, Layna Macapagal and Mylene Manuel, Rosejoy Pimuela and Maricel Braga, Rose Anne Baraga and Carla Santos, Meanne Calara and Theresa Lopez, and Michelle Pinero and Joan Namuco.

Abundo, a former national volleyball team star, said she was fortunate to have closed a deal with the Cantada Sports Center, courtesy of its owner Boy Cantada.

"We're glad to be concluding this beach volleyball event over at the CSC," she said. "We thank Mr. Boy Cantada, whose heart is really for sports development."

Abundo said the volleyball boom, whether the regular land or the beach volley type, is a good sign that the sport, which enjoyed immense popularity from the 1970s to the early 1990s, is on the upswing.

"Volleyball tournaments are again drawing the crowds and hogging the sports pages, and we have to take advantage of this," Abundo said.

"As a former volleyball player, it is my fondest wish to bring back the glory days of volleyball in the country."

Davao booters edge Cebu, cop Under-19 title

SUSTAINING its streak of success, Davao edged Cebu, 2-1, yesterday to rule the PFF/Adidas U-19 Championship at the San Carlos football pitch in Talamban, Cebu City.

Eduardo Gempisaw and Clifford Dacera struck for Davao in the second half and Cebu just managed a single goal through ace Ronald Mahilum in the 81st minute of the well-attended finals.

It was a wonderful result for the Davao Football Association, which is basking on a spate of football successes lately.

Last August, Davao's Under-19 girl-booters took the silver medal in the National Superferry Under-19 tournament and their women's squad returned home in September with the gold in the 'Open' division.

Iloilo won the battle for third place over the National Capital Region with a 4-2 victory in the penalty shoot-out after a scoreless draw in 90 minutes.

The National Capital Region was also beaten in the semifinals by Davao, 4-3.

Content in feeling out the home side, the Davaoños stayed organized against a Cebu squad out to prove a point.

But while they dominated the early exchanges, the Visayans did not look comfortable attacking their opponents.

After the break, Davao coach Ra-monito Carreon made adjustments and his strikers started to create problems for the Cebu defenders. Thirteen minutes into the half, Davao was rewarded by a Gempisaw strike. As the Cebuanos went on attack-mode in search of an equalizer, Dacera burned their defenses to double the advantage for his side, 2-0.

Mahilum, who beat Iloilo in Sunday's semis, pulled one on the 81st minute, but it was not enough this time.

The finals was a rematch of Group A squads who played only last week to a nail-biting 1-1 draw in the eliminations.

The event was organized for the Philippine Football Federation by the Cebu Football Association. It was backed by Petron, Superferry, Red Ribbon Bakeshop and supported on television by "Soccer Showdown", the local football program on ABC Channel 5.

Castañares eyes title in New Zealand

LIKE the popular Manny Pacquiao, Philippine junior welterweight champion Dindo Castañares also has an important date this Saturday. Mosquera, the Auckland-based Colombian, parades a record of 38 wins (19 KOs) against 5 losses and a draw. After a failed attempt at the WBL crown, Pantera is out to secure the world title this time. Castañares goes into the bout armed with a 14-3-1 win-loss-draw record with 10 KOs. New Zealander David Werimu takes on Fiji's Ja Ali, while NZ's Chris Reh battles Fiji's Wahid Khan in the preliminaries according to WBF New Zealand supervisor Denny Enright.

SHAKY'S V-LEAGUE

Legends, Tigresses clash for solo lead

FEU defenders try to block the spike of Latran's Macatangay.

By Musong R. Castillo

AUGUST Sta. Maria has been in the sport long enough to know what's doable and otherwise.

He knows that the Philippine Sports Commission Lady Legends can be beaten.

"They're not unbeatable," Sta. Maria said on the eve of his Santo Tomas Tigresses' much-awaited clash with the Lady Legends for solo leadership in the Shakey's V-League eliminations at the Rizal Memorial Coliseum.

"They have the advantage in manpower, that's obvious," Sta. Maria added. "But they can be beaten. They won't have the same easy time against us."

The defending champion Tigresses square off with the Lady Legends in the 3 p.m. game, looking to become the first team in the tournament to see a PSC tumble even as La Salle and San Sebastian try to win for the first time at each other's expense at 5 o'clock.

PSC is walking with a big bull's-eye in its back after winning its first three games. It remains favored to notch a fourth straight win against a side highly touted due to its superior firepower and experience.

Santo Tomas has won its first two assignments and only dropped a set in the tournament like PSC.

The Tigresses will be coming off a straight-sets victory against Letran on Sunday and Sta. Maria plans to take the fight to the Lady Legends early since PSC, whose average age is 34, will also be playing after only a day's rest.

Roxanne Pimentel, one of two UST reinforcements, is the most prolific attacker in the tournament thus far. She was credited for 20 points against the Lady Knights, 14 of them coming from kills.

"We need to receive well and control the game early," said Sta. Maria, whose 25 years at the helm of the UST volleyball program has produced at least 10 UAAP titles and other various collegiate trophies.

"I know for a fact that we can defend as well as anyone in the league. If we can get our offense going the way it was in the last two games, we have a better than average chance of winning."

55th Fil-Am Inv't'1 tees off today

BAGUIO CITY—The young teams of Southwoods and Mizuno-DHL go from top contenders to underdogs when the 55th Fil-Am Invitational Golf Tournament gets going at the Baguio Country Club and Camp John Hay courses here.

After a three-year title duel, Southwoods and Mizuno-DHL are now the dark horses with the entry of Nike Golf Team bannered by crack players from Canlubang and Calatagan as well as Del Monte Golf Club, the PAL Interclub champion last March.

"Nike and Del Monte are the feared team. Man to man, hindi kami laaban (we're not in the fight) but this is teamwork," said defending champion Mizuno-DHL team captain Lowell Gopez.

Gopez said their advantage as underdogs is that the pressure will be off them.

Mizuno-DHL has Marvin Dumandan, Samsung Tour champion Raymond Sangil, Laurence Negrido, Erwin Vinluan and Marvin Dumandan. The players who won the Fil title for Mizuno last year are now with Del Monte.

Dumandan was runner-up in the FILA Sanjaya Amateur Open in Malaysia last May while Sangil was runner-up in the recent Kau Sai Chau-Asian Golf Monthly International Amateur Open in Hong Kong.

Southwoods is composed of young stars Artemio Murakami, 21, Antonio Asisto, 15; Gene Bondoc, 19; and Mike Bibar, 20. Junjun Plans at 37 is the team's wise old man.

"The ball is round," said Murakami of their chances.

Their main worry is the Nike Golf team led by top amateur Juvic Pagunasan, who paired with Murakami in sweeping the 74th Thailand Amateur Open Golf Championship recently. Other members of Nike are Jim Bernis, Boy Saragosa, Jay Bayron and JR Tampungco.

Such is the strength of the Nike squad that eight-time, Fil-Am individual champ Tommy Manotoc has opted to play in the Am division.

"This will be an interesting fight. This is no longer a two-team contest," said Del Monte's Paul Muñoz, younger brother of Frank Muñoz, who is playing here with fellow PAL teammates led by Tristan Tabanas, Romeo Jaraula, Louie Dacudao and Joel Opaco.

Action in the championship flight will start on Thursday.

Today, players from 80 teams in Classes B, C and D will be teeing off first as early as 6 a.m.

The Class B in the Fil Division are PAGA International, Dugong Bughaw, Agunaldo and Navy while BMG Solar Team, Dugong Bughaw and Nueva Ecija Golf Team are the top seeds in the Am Division.

In Class C, Publicis Dialog, Club Marinduque, Capitol Hills and Fil-Am at San Diego fight it out with nine other teams. Frank Cinaru, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Golf war

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

CLEAR the way for the weary warriors.

They are not that weary, really. At first glance, they seemed tired. You could almost see it in the way they walk. They have leaden legs, laboring every step of the way as they trudge to the clubhouse from the 18th green. Thirty six holes in eight hours covered in two days—minus the benefit of a ride—could be energy-sapping, debilitating.

But don't be fooled, though. They are of a different breed—like those in mythical Troy, they fight to the last drop of their blood. Their knees will always be in command of their heartbeat that even if they'd been practicing frenetically the past two days, there's no mountain that can't be scared—no matter the odds.

They'd be playing four days starting today, over 72 difficult holes, on terrain that aren't the friendliest this side of the golfing globe.

While the Baguio Country Club has retained its cardiac holes that remain the bane of many golfers from the low lands, Camp John Hay is no easy picking, though. CJH, although it's been redesigned by Jack Nicklaus, has not been overhauled to suit the taste of dulfers simply out to have fun in the sun.

But make no mistake about it: Those set to be unleashed today are more than ready. For one, their bodies are built to last the siege. For another, their minds are set to complete the conquest. They aren't like the seniors: More play, less business. In the Men's Regular of the 55th Fil-Am Golf Invitational that begins today at both the Baguio Country Club and Camp John Hay, it's all business for the 800 or so participants. No play. To the purists, the word fun is no-no.

Mizuno-DHL has come back to defend the tournament's most coveted plum, the Fil title. It finally won the crown last year in its third attempt to unseat CAP-Southwoods, still too stunned over the setback it seemed it was in no mood for competition this year; it has fielded a not-so-competitive bunch of youngsters. I wonder if CAP-Southwoods is even ready to properly defend its Am title.

Del Monte, with some of its players formerly with Mizuno-DHL, can give Mizuno-DHL some headaches but then, newcomer Nike—not really a rookie squad if we consider the players in its fold—has been grudgingly considered out to transform the tournament into a commercial war.

You see, the last three, four, years saw Mizuno-DHL star as the team chiefly credited with returning the fire and fervor of this fabled tournament. Its participation alone—never mind if it finished second the last two, three, years prior to 2003—has rekindled the event's old flame: Its players offered perennial champion Southwoods a thrilling, exciting and drama-filled challenge from beginning to end. In short, with Nike's participation, Mizuno-DHL has got company. Mizuno, in case you've forgotten, has been giving Nike over the years a tough time insofar as sales of golf equipment is concerned.

And so, if the Arab world had its golf war, the Fil-Am now has its own golf war. Indeed, the Fil-Am, the largest golf tournament in the world in terms of the number of participants, does not, will never, run out of novel-ities.

Suns scorch Trail Blazers; Peja rallies Kings past Celts

NEW YORK—Quentin Richardson poured in 37 points, including eight three-pointers, and Shawn Marion added 16 points and 12 rebounds to lead the Phoenix Suns to a 121-99 thrashing of the host Portland Trail Blazers Sunday.

Amare Stoudemire had 19 points and nine rebounds for the Suns, who blew open the game with 37 points in the fourth quarter and led by as many as 25 at one stage.

Phoenix (14-3) hit back in style in its first game since losing for the first time in 10 outings Friday to Minnesota.

Steve Nash also claimed a double-double for Phoenix with 10 points and 11 assists while Joe Johnson chipped in with 15 points.

Zach Randolph collected 24 points and 11 rebounds for Portland and Shareef Abdur-Rahim added 15 points and 11 rebounds.

Ruben Patterson posted 15 points for the Trail Blazers while Darius Miles had 14. Portland (8-8) has lost two straight since reeling off four wins out of five.

In Sacramento, Peja Stojakovic registered 27 points, including six three-pointers, as the Kings rolled to a 119-105 victory over the Boston Celtics.

Brad Miller added 22 points and 10 rebounds for Sacramento (12-5) while Chris Webber had 18 points and 10 rebounds.

Mike Bibby picked up 15 points and 10 assists for the Kings, who overcame a 36-18 first-quarter deficit with six players scoring in double figures.

Mark Blount recorded 18 points and eight rebounds for Boston (7-9) but his team allowed 37 points in the second quarter and another 38 in the third.

Paul Pierce added 16 points for the Celtics while Raef LaFrentz notched 15 points and 14 rebounds.

Moya relishes dream as Spain grabs crown

SEVILLE, Spain—A majestic Carlos Moya tamed world No. 2 Andy Roddick, 6-2, 7-6, 7-6, on Sunday to clinch the Davis Cup for Spain.

The popular Mallorcan erased the heartache of missing Spain's maiden triumph in 2000 by bringing the American to his knees in front of more than 27,000 frenzied fans in Seville's Olympic Stadium.

"It is a moment I have been waiting for for many years," Moya said, tears glistening in his eyes. "An incredible way to win the Cup."

"The Davis Cup is my dream. I don't believe there is anything bigger than what I've lived through today," the former world No. 1 added.

Roddick, caked in red clay, hurled himself all over the specially constructed court throughout the contest but was simply unable to fend off his tormentor.

"Bottom line is they were just better than us this weekend," Roddick said, refusing to blame a groin strain he suffered in the second set for his defeat. "You can say whatever you want, but they came out, they took care of business. They beat us. It's as simple as that."

Moya's victory—a first over Roddick after three defeats—gave Spain an unassailable 3-1 lead over the United States.

Moya beat Marty Fish and Roddick fell to Rafael Nadal on the opening day before Bob and Mike Bryan won Saturday's doubles.

Fish later made it 3-2 with a 7-6, 6-2 victory over Tommy Robredo in the dead rubber.

Moya's victory over Roddick made his fellow Mallorcan Nadal the youngest player to help win the Davis Cup.

Aged 18 years and 185 days, Nadal beat the record set by Australia's Pat Cash in 1983 by 30 days.

Former French Open champion Moya got off to a great start on Sunday, streaking into a 4-0 lead before Roddick registered on the scoreboard.

With Spanish trumpeters tooting in the crowd and against a sea of red and yellow flags, the world No. 5 teased and tormented the rampaging Roddick with an array of spins and angles.

Moya wrapped up the opening set in just 36 minutes as US coach Patrick McEnroe squirmed in his courtside seat.

Tennis' new young star rises in Nadal

SEVILLE, Spain—Tennis may have a new star—18-year-old Spaniard Rafael Nadal.

In beating world No. 2 Andy Roddick in four sets on the first day of the Davis Cup final before a record 27,200 fans, he has made his mark as the latest in a long line of talented Spanish players.

"In each period of my life there have been key matches," he said. "Maybe this is one of them."

His friends call him "Biturbo," which translates to "Twin Turbo."

It's easy to see why.

Nadal is a 1.85-meter (6-foot-1) left-hander with a powerful, sweeping stroke who can play from the baseline on clay but—as he showed in beating Roddick—has raw power to go with a boyish face.

And the fans—at least the Spanish fans—love him for his exuberance and his leaps and scissor kicks on the court after winning big points.

After beating Roddick, he hopped on his back and rolled in the dusty red clay in Seville's Olympic Stadium. As teammate Carlos Moya defeated Roddick on Sunday to clinch the title over the United States, Nadal was the team's main cheerleader on the bench.

Nadal was a surprise pick to play singles instead of former French Open champion Juan Carlos Ferrero. Ferrero, a former world No. 1, was slowed all season by chicken pox and broken ribs. Of Spain's four Davis players, Nadal's ranking was the lowest—51.

Nadal joins a long line of Spanish talent: Sergi Bruguera, Alex Corretja, Albert Costa, Ferrero and Moya. The line stretches back to the player regarded as Spain's best ever—Manuel Santana.

Goosen keeps his cool, tops Nedbank Thais shoot for hat-trick

SUN CITY, South Africa—Rebief Goosen converted a superb five-under-par front nine into a serene six-stroke victory at the Nedbank Challenge as third-round leader Lee Westwood saw his chances sunk in a welter of bogeys on Sunday.

Goosen, the US Open champion, won from countryman and world No. 2-ranked player Ernie Els and Australia's Stuart Appleby. Els, a three-time champion at Sun City, carded a final-round 71, while Appleby struggled to a 74.

Goosen nearly didn't start the tournament. He said: "I heard on Wednesday that my newborn daughter, Ella, was in hospital with bronchitis."

"I was all ready to climb onto a plane right away and go back to London, but my wife, Tracy, persuaded me to play, and this win certainly makes it worthwhile."

It was at the eighth and ninth holes of the 7,162-meter (7,835 yard) par-72 Gary Player Country Club course that the tournament was won and lost as Goosen finished seven-under par.

Westwood carded a calamitous triple-bogey on the par-four eighth. He shot a fine birdie on the par-five ninth, but Goosen responded with an eagle on the same hole.

"After that, I thought I could get to 12-under for the tournament," said Goosen, "but the bogeys on 10 and 11 put that out the window."

That left Westwood having to do precisely what he said the day before should not be done on the difficult course—he had to play aggressively.

But the aggression led him to drop seven shots—five bogeys and a double bogey—as Goosen won the tournament billed as "Africa's Major" at his fourth attempt.

Nerves played a big role as he shot four bogeys of his own on the back nine—a stark contrast to his cool play on the outward journey which included three birdies and an eagle.

"I just thought of staying ahead," said Goosen. "I was making a lot of mistakes, but no one was going to make a run at me the way the course was playing."

The eagle was the point at which Goosen appeared to have Westwood reeling on the ropes. He was reticent when it came to planting the knockout blow, however.

After he bogeyed the relatively easy par-five 10th, he compounded the impression of a player about to buckle himself when he pulled his drive on the 11th, left his approach a long way right and bogeyed for a second successive hole.

There were bogeys again on 13 and 18 but, by then, Westwood's challenge had evaporated.

For Goosen, who had been battling the effects of a three-week long cold, the whole tournament was a struggle.

"Every shot was like a fight out there this week," he said.

Goosen, whose US Open win this year came at the very tough Shinnecock Hills course, said he relished the challenge posed by difficult courses.

"This was one of the toughest courses we played on all year," he said. "I like it when it's really tough. I think better players come through on a tough course."

The course caused a trail of poor scores. None was poorer than Spaniard Sergio Garcia, who finished 15-over-par.

Thais shoot for hat-trick

HANOI, Vietnam—Southeast Asia's biennial battle for football supremacy kicks off Tuesday with regional giants Thailand gunning for a hat-trick in the 10-team Tiger Cup.

Thailand, which begins its campaign against Malaysia in Kuala Lumpur on Friday, starts as favorite to be crowned champion of the Asean Football Championship for the third tournament in a row.

Launched eight years ago, the Tiger Cup has been held every two years since 1996 and has emerged as Southeast Asia's premier international football event.

This year's competition is being co-hosted by Malaysia and Vietnam, with each nation staging one of the two first round pools of five teams before home-and-away knockout rounds start on Dec. 29.

Group A gets under way in Ho Chi Minh City on Tuesday with Laos meeting Indonesia while Singapore plays host Vietnam. Cambodia completes the group.

Group B, which kicks off in Kuala Lumpur on Wednesday, sees host Malaysia pitted with Thailand, the Philippines, Myanmar and East Timor.

With victories in three of the four Tiger Cups held to date, Thailand starts as the team to beat despite a troubled year which has seen them change coach twice, exit World Cup qualifiers early and get trounced at the Asian Cup.

The Thais warmed up for the competition with a penalty shoot-out loss against Slovakia in Bangkok last week after a 1-1 draw in normal time.

Coach Siegfried Held said the match showed up weaknesses in Thai ranks, and has called for his team to maintain possession more effectively.

A DOCTOR fails to revive Brazilian striker Christiano de Lima Jr. AP

Death on the field

NEW DELHI—A Brazilian-born soccer player with an Indian club collapsed and died on Sunday, moments after scoring his second goal in his team's 2-0 victory.

Dempo club striker Christiano de Lima Jr., 24, appeared to clash with Mohun Bagan's goalkeeper while scoring and staggered away and collapsed during the final of the Federation Cup, a top interclub event played in the southern city of Bangalore.

The unconscious player was taken to a hospital but was declared dead by the doctors, Albert Colaco, secretary of the All India Football Federation told Reuters.

De Lima was a prolific goal-scorer since arriving in India a few seasons ago.

Top stars' latest films

WHAT are our favorite film stars up to these days? Julia Roberts has just given birth to preemie twins, and has two starrers opening this month—"Oceans 12" and "Closer."

In "Ocean's 12," she shares star billing with many lead players, paced by George Clooney, Matt Damon and Catherine Zeta-Jones.

The film is a breezy heist caper that's more fun than really substantial. For greater significance, Julia's other starrer, "Closer," is "it." Her co-star, Jude Law, raves about her performance, and says that she could be in the running for another acting award next year.

That's all to the good, because Julia intends to be a full-time, hands-on mom to her twins (Phineas Walter and Hazel Patricia). So, she's putting her acting career on hold for a few film seasons.

The fun, intense themselves with her two "final" films for years on end, while she pays com-

new family

Each year

These days

a thriller set high up in the air. Jodie plays a woman who decides to return home to the United States with her young daughter, after her husband dies.

However, while on the flight, her daughter mysteriously disappears, and Jodie has her work cut out for her to regain control of her only child.

Vin Diesel stars as Navy Seal in "The Pacifier." As an elite member of the world's best-trained force, his character is prepared to follow any order, no matter how perilous or difficult—until he tries baby sitting!

Diesel is assigned to protect the unruly children of a scientist who's been assassinated while working on top-secret government projects. Thus, he suddenly has to juggle two outrageously incompatible jobs: fighting the bad guys while keeping house.

The role is very different from Diesel's usual tough-guy characters, so check with viewers. On the other hand, we recall that Arnold Schwarzenegger once tried to also play it cute and domesticated in this fashion, but his gambit bombed. Let's hope Diesel does better!

Like Jodie Foster, Jennifer Connelly is going the chiller route in her next film, "Dark Water." Based on a Japanese movie by the people who created "The Ring," this production casts Connelly as a mother who goes to extreme lengths to keep her daughter safe. —Hey, she and Jodie should really work together!

Keanu Reeves' new starrer is "Constantine," where he plays a misfit who investigates mysteries involving the supernatural. He walks a thin line between good and evil, but he's used to it.

In time, he teams up with a female police detective (Rachel Weisz), who seeks his help in investigating the death of her twin sister.

As for Harrison Ford, "The Wrong Element" casts him as the security chief of a big bank.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

When his family is kidnapped, he has to grapple with a major dilemma. He has to neutralize his bank's own security safeguards and steal $37 million from its vaults to save his family.

That's quite a twist, but Johnny Depp has the biggest plot "hook" to contend with in his new starrer, "The Corpse Bride."

The film's title hints at his character's weird problem. In the macabre movie directed by Tim Burton, Depp plays a man who mistakenly weds a murdered woman!

Teen stars on video

TEENAGE idols Hilary Duff and the Olsen Twins will soon release their recent starrers on video. In "New York Minute," Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen play sisters who look alike but are exact opposites in temperament, one being conservative and the other a daredevil.

In Hilary Duff's starrer, "Cinderella Story," she plays the "enslaved" Sam, who meets her Prince Charming Austin (Chad Michael Murray) on the Internet. He turns out to be a popular football player, so he's quite a catch.

Search for Dance Idols

STREETPARK productions presents "Dance Idol," a comprehensive dance talent search at the UP Theater in Diliman on Jan. 8, 2005.

Categories include cheer-dance and open category (high school), jazz and streetdance (college), and an open level for school-based or professional dance groups. There will also be a tour of participating schools, and a TV special.

For inquiries, registration and sponsorship, call 436-8882 or email info@streetparkprod.com.

Chilly weather music and fine food ...

On Dec. 31, ring in the New Year with the dynamic and refreshingly vibrant Forte Band led by seasoned performers Pat Castillo, Jakiri and Chito Ilagan. This is not your usual retro band. With music best described as retro-fusion, it dishes out its own version of hits from the '50s to '90s artists like Louis Armstrong, Norah Jones and Guns N' Roses.

Chef Billy King will serve up a hearty New Year's Eve barbecue dinner buffet at P750 for adults and P400 for children 12 years old and below, with a complimentary welcome drink and a glass of champagne.

From Dec. 20 to Jan. 1, 2005, the popular Piano Bar at Camp John Hay Manor will feature resident pianist David Tabligan playing his soulful, romantic arrangements from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. followed by the versatile On-Q Band from 10 p.m. to 12 midnight. Enjoy the fine sounds as you sit by the fireplace and savor the cool-weather favorite, cheese fondue, perfect with a cool, crisp white wine, or the prawn and vegetable tempura basket with hot or cold sake.

The Manor lobby will resonate with the angelic voices of children's choirs from various Baguio schools from Dec. 16 to 24, 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Dare to be different during the holidays. Experience the unique, thoroughly invigorating Baguio scene.

For ticket reservations to "Forest Fever," call the Manor Executive Office, (6374) 445-0231 ext. 1054, the Manila Sales office, (632) 6876-710, or e-mail reservations@campjohnhayhotels.com, or sales@campjohnhayhotels.com.

LADINE ROXAS

Ladine, totally different

SHE'S often out of the country, competing in international song festivals or simply performing. Now, award-winning, Ladine Roxas hopes to stay home longer so she can share her talents, this time with her countrymen.

For the first project under Primeline Inc., which counts her as its newest talent, Ladine is performing in a series of shows at Merit's Bar and Bistro on all Mondays of December. The series, "Here I am... Ladine," shows a totally different artist from the one we know who belts out difficult melodies of international festival quality. This time, she's more relaxed, more laid-back, singing songs that range from good old favorites to pop. "The repertoire consists of crossover songs, standards from the '70s to the '80s that are in danger of extinction because of the prevalence of hip hop and their kind," says Ladine.

She promises to get up close and personal with the audience as she interprets Anita Baker, James Ingram and Michael McDonald's songs and gives in to audience requests.

"I will just go with the flow, to where the audience will take me," she adds. She promises that no two shows will be alike, as she presents a different guest each week. Last night, she had Ruzza Navales. On Dec. 13, it's 604, Dec. 20, Tin Arnaiz and Dec. 27, singer-comedian Bernie Uy.

Ladine is conceptualizing her third album, for release in mid-2005.

'EDGE OF REASON' Defying the elements to meet Renee Z

DOLLY WOOD

Dolly Ann Carvajal

WHEN I flew to Taipei with my fun colleague, Walden Belen of Manila Bulletin, to interview Renee Zellweger for her latest movie, "Bridget Jones's Edge of Reason," I was on the edge of my plane seat all the way.

Typhoon Yoyong was raging, and I knew it could move in our direction at any blessed moment. I just consoled myself with the thought that, just like the character Bridget Jones, I was in for some out-of-this-world adventure. Good thing I somehow imbibed Bridget's grace under pressure. I reached Taipei in one piece. In the absence of heroes, I turn to Bridget Jones for inspiration. And so have most women who are caught in the cycle of love and pain.

Defying the elements was well worth it—a small price to pay for meeting Renee up close and personal. She was genuinely nice and oh so warm. Before we started the interview she even told me that it was brave of me to fly in such stormy weather. She also said she felt sorry for the Filipinos devastated by the recent typhoons. It reminded her of the time she was growing up in Texas, she said, when her family had to contend with typhoons, too, every so often.

Renee was clad in a simple black top and denim jeans. She hardly had any makeup on. The Bridget Jones star has shed all the extra pounds that were a requisite for her role. She's now turned brunette for a film she's wrapping up in Canada. Like a little girl, she hollered for her assistant and requested that her cute little yellow teddy bear be brought to her. She clutched the bear as she faced the Asian press. Renee didn't mind that the sound system started conking out at some point. She never stopped smiling even as she sat through the "Chinese translation" portions.

When I kissed her goodbye, I was surprised that she even noticed the scent I was wearing. "You smell exactly like my best friend!" she said. It was my turn to smile. I may never get the chance to really be her best friend, but for a brief moment in Taipei, she made me feel that. Oh, well... the next best thing, I guess, is having Bridget Jones as my best friend. After watching "Edge of Reason," I know most women will agree that we all have an ally for life.

Here are some highlights of my "girl talk" with Renee:

I heard that you had some apprehension about playing Bridget Jones again?

I was a bit hesitant because of the physical transformation I had to do over again but I feel responsible to all the women who relate to Bridget and also to Helen Fielding. I didn't want it to be a superficial visitation of character. It's important that the vulnerability of Bridget be maintained.

FORTE BAND

Chilly weather music and fine food at John Hay

IN THIS time of merrymaking, the chilly Baguio weather beckons. The mountain city's Camp John Hay welcomes you with a lineup of holiday celebrations complete with fine food, wine and music for the whole family.

Following the success of last year's "Forest Fever" musical, Camp John Hay continues the tradition and celebrates December's nights with three nights of music, bonfire and barbecue, Dec. 29 to 31 at the Garden Wing of the CAR-John Hay Trade and Convention Center starting at 8 p.m. The Garden Wing will light up with a cozy bonfire mixed with the heady smell of succulent barbecue on the grill.

On Dec. 29, be mesmerized by the dynamic beat of rhythm and blues band, Brown Flava. On Dec. 30, the reggae show band Space Flower will enthrall you with its distinctive style, refreshing repertoire and compelling stage presence. Both bands already have a loyal following that covers a wide age group from Baguio's expat and local community.

Tickets to the Brown Flava and Space Flower performances at the Garden Wing are P100, consumable.

CHILLY/A26

"IT'S QUITE a privilege to affect women in a strong way."

You make losing weight sound so easy! It's just part of the process. I had to look like Bridget as she is described in the book. Now that I've stopped playing her character I've stopped looking and talking like her. To change your body in a brief period of time makes you feel the repercussions when you go back to the gym. I've stopped eating the pizza delivery man. The best exercise I got while doing the film was going up and down the mountain slopes during the hilarious ski scene. I did all the stunts myself. I'm a better skier now than when we shot that scene. The idiosyncrasies are so perfect!

What's it like working with Hugh Grant and Colin Firth?

They are both from theater. Both very cerebral and professional. We all have a serious work ethic but we also laugh a lot.

In real life would you fall for the Mark Darcy or Daniel Cleaver type?

Are we talking about Hugh and Colin or their roles (laughs)? I'm not that simple. Hugh and Colin are both lovely men. I would say I'd go for a nice amalgamation of the better qualities of Mark and Daniel. What was the most challenging scene for you in the movie?

It was quite difficult for me to prance around wearing a pink bra than changing my body physically. I have to separate my emotions from what I'm doing. It may not seem like something extraordinary but it is to me. Also the porch scene with Hugh. We had to find the right balance. It had to be genuine and appropriately timed.

In what ways are you like Bridget Jones? Like her I always pick myself up after I fall. I go fast forward!

Did you ever write a diary like Bridget?

Yup, but nothing for movie material... although Oprah has been convincing me to write a book.

What's the best part of playing Bridget Jones?

It's quite a privilege to affect women in a strong way. Like Bridget has given way to a whole new culture. I also enjoyed experiencing culture from the inside when we went on location in Thailand.

Logging behind

BREAKTIME

Conrado R. Banal III

THE MOST difficult part in any investigation of any disaster is, well, anybody who has any firsthand experience of the actual suffering is most likely dead.

That's actually the problem of this cute administration of Gloriaaeta regarding the recent flooding and landslide in Quezon province which killed hundreds of people.

From media reports inspired by the Palace, we learn that this cute administration is exerting all effort—leaving no stone unturned, sparing no government limited resources—to solve the mystery behind who the Palace can blame for the disaster.

All right, so what else is new?

ANYWAY, Gloriaaeta herself came out with media guns blazing, pinning the blame on right on alleged "illegal" loggers.

The illegal loggers are, of course, all nameless, faceless criminals who are the worst enemies of the people. Otherwise, if this cute administration knows who they are, they would be in jail by now.

No names came out in the Palace's media blame-throwing. The actual real-life names came out in the form of business outfits. Some supposed "environmentalists," calling themselves the "multi-sectoral action group," released the names to media.

Whadyano, these are the companies which the government has allowed to carry out logging operations in the provinces of Aurora and Quezon. The usual suspects, in short.

NOW I did a little checking with the Department of Environment and Natural Resources. Its records show that, all in all, the DENR has so-called TLA, or "timber licensing agreements," with 18 companies.

Now the TLA is a mere privilege given by the state to private companies. The TLA is lower in rank than your Christmas gift to your mother-in-law. The government can get back the TLA anytime. Try doing that to you.

Anyway, official records also show that, of the 18 TLAs, only four are operating at the moment. And one of them is operating near the area where the disaster happened in northern Quezon.

That is the TLA under the name of Inter-Pacific Forest Resources Corp., or IFRC, which is supposedly owned and controlled by a lawyer named Romeo Roxas.

His is the only licensed logging operation in close proximity to the so-called "disaster" areas. These are the towns of Nakar, Infanta, and Real in the northern part of Quezon province.

From what I gathered, IFRC also operated near the Paltic town in Aurora province, where flooding also occurred. To think, there's a watershed in the area.

In the business, "watershed" automatically means "no," absolutely, "no logging."

The same company has operations at the southern tip of Aurora province. This is the logging operation which is actually nearest the disaster areas in Quezon.

Still, this particular IFRC operation is located in the southern part of Aurora province, which is near the boundary of Quezon.

Romeo Roxas, by the way, is the guy who became famous in the stock market for trying to list a real estate company that had questionable land documents.

ANYWAY, I just found out that the other companies which were mentioned by the supposed "environmentalists," as reported by the INQUIRER, actually do not have TLAs.

The others actually have what is known in the logging business as IFMA, or the "integrated forest management agreement."

The IFMA is a contract. It is a business deal between the government and the private company. Believe me, the IFMA goes through rigorous screening.

The screening is so rigorous, almost all of the companies that have been named by the supposed "environmentalists" are not operating despite having those IFMAs.

And why is that? Well, according to my informers in the DENR, they have yet to get DENR approval for their "operation plans."

No operation plan, no operation!

I LEARNED from the DENR that only one of the companies in the news report is actually operating. It is the one called Industries Development Corp., or IDC, which has that so-called IFMA.

In the wood industry, the company is associated with a businessman named Joselito "Jojo" Ong, who belongs to a group that reportedly owns a furniture shop in Libis, Quezon City.

Still, IDC operates in the northern part of Aurora province. Its area, in other words, is quite far from the "disaster" areas, which are in the northern part of Quezon province. For the sake of Bong and Lito, Quezon is south of Aurora.

Another IFMA holder in the northern part of Aurora province is Toplite Lumber. From what I gathered, it already stopped operations about a year ago.

NOW, as I said, the flooding and landslide actually happened in the northern part of Quezon, particularly Nakar, Real and Infanta.

You know what, there are no (as in ZERO) licensed logging companies anywhere near or inside the disaster area.

The last known TLA there, based on DENR records, was cancelled during martial law.

But if you travel in the area, you can actually see a lot of sawmills. There are at least 20 sawmills. Again, that's AT LEAST 20. There may be more. Those were the only ones I discovered.

Question: Where do they get the logs? Where else, from illegal logging. And this happens in an area that became famous for the cantankerous issue called "log ban."

THAT'S a law, by the way, and in this country under this cute administration of Gloriaaeta, we churn out laws which we cannot implement.

For whatever reason, nobody seems to follow the Clean Air Act, for instance, which is a law against pollution.

Look, we have one of the highest, if not actually the highest, pollution indexes in the whole wide world.

But we are not supposed to have pollution on paper. It's the law, right?

And so our wonderful Congress keeps on passing new laws which do not see the light of implementation.

Like it or not, anything which you task anybody to do, most especially the government, must cost some money.

Any action of the government needs funding. And I mean "anything" at all in the government, as anywhere, nothing can move without funding.

That's the problem with the "log ban." We wrote the law, but we forgot to write down where to get the funding to implement it, and implement it strictly.

I say that, from now on, if Congress passes a law like the "log ban," it should pinpoint the specific revenue measure to implement it.

Or else the illegal loggers are always going to be one step ahead of us. What's that, logging behind?

IN THE aftermath of every disaster is blame-throwing. I think we need less politics in this country, and a bit more of science.

Let us, for instance, begin to list down the "high risk" settlement areas. Surely, history can tell us where the floodwaters from the rains usually pass. Then we will know where to prohibit settlements.

I talk of "high risk" settlement areas, because I just found out that the DENR has already analyzed one of the disaster areas as prone to landslide.

It is the town of Paltic in Aurora, which is right smack on the Dingalan-Gabalidon major fault line.

No wonder. The DENR scientists already warned that the area was prone to landslide. And so a lot of people put up houses all over the place.

Without the use of science, we therefore solve problems by throwing some blame around. As always, the blame is all too soon forgotten.

Supreme Court makes up its mind

GETTING mugged while carrying a cell phone is such a normal event these days that you almost expect it to happen, but the crime situation has worsened. With the price of gold at a 16-year high, people are now getting mugged for their gold teeth. In Makati, two men attacked a man coming out of a dental clinic. One hit him on the head, dazing him while the other opened his mouth, and with a pair of pliers, yanked out 4 gold teeth. The attack took place around tooth hurt.

In Mabini, a man carrying a refilled cylinder of LPG, now up P40 to P420 per cylinder, was leaving the garage when a big man grabbed the cylinder and effortlessly ran off with it. The police are looking for an Olympic weightlifter. And in a well-known bowling alley, dozens of bowling balls have disappeared right under people's noses. Please call the police if you see a 3-fingered pick-pocket.

The government is trying to pretend that inflation is 8 percent a year, but I think it is a monthly. Owing to the unprecedented strength of the peso, Swiss chocolate has become so expensive that they are now selling it one square at a time. Even SMARTIES are being sold singly at P1 a piece. As for seedless grapes, they are being auctioned off at P3 per grape. No wonder I seedless people buying them.

In Chow King, 4 pieces of siopao used to cost P27, now it is P30 for 3 pieces. So the cost per piece has risen from P6.75 to P10, an increase of 33 percent. That should be good for Jollibee's profit margin but not so good for the diners. KIDIEPAC mineral water is up from P38 to P44 this year, an increase of 30 percent.

Even my can if HAKONE sardines jumped overnight from P19 to P26, up almost 40 percent. When I complained to the manager, he said, "Well, they are in oil and you know what has happened to oil prices." I replied, "They are in vegetable oil, not diesel. At least, I hope not."

The government calculations are based on Filipinos eating boiled rice, drinking tap water and walking to work, assuming they have a job. For anyone living in Manila, these figures are purely fictitious.

Last week was a short one, what with Monday being declared a holiday instead of Tuesday; then the stock market closed on Friday for absolutely no reason. There wasn't a drop of rain or a breath of wind. Whoever decided to close the banks and the PSE should be demoted to traffic duty.

The most important event was the Supreme Court reversing its decision on the 1995 Mining Act. Two weeks earlier, I watched Jose de Venecia for an hour and he assured viewers that he would get 3 to 4 bills passed before the Senate recesses on Dec. 17. He also said that he was talking individually with every judge trying to convince them to change course for the good of the country. Well, he succeeded and they voted by 10 to 4 with one abstention, thereby reversing their decision. Congratulations to all concerned.

This is the best news that the Philippines has had for a very long time. It means that countries, like Australia and Canada, can now bring in billions of dollars plus equipment and technology to reopen our dormant or loss-making mines. According to De Venecia there is $1 trillion worth of gold waiting to be dug up and sold. Economic Planning Secretary Romulo Neri puts the figure at $840 billion but that is still 15 times our foreign debt. Apart from creating more than 20,000 new jobs, it will bring prosperity back to a country that sorely needs it. The inflow of capital could be $6 to $7 billion.

No wonder that there was a boom in mining stocks. Foreigners can only buy the "B"

MR. BEARBULL

shares but Filipinos can buy the cheaper ordinary shares. For sure, there is going to be a sustained rise in gold stocks. But which ones will they buy? The primary factor is liquidity. US and European investment houses will not buy unless they can deal in reasonable amounts.

PXB only had 150,000 shares available at the close on Thursday, which at 74 centavos is only P100,000. LCB had P1 million worth on offer, but MAB had 300 million shares at .027, a total of P8.1 million, so I think that is the one they will go for. There was also 300 million MA at .021, a total of P6.3 million. Altogether, MAB traded 2.3 billion shares and MA 2.2 billion shares. So if you want to speculate, I suggest MA at .021 but they will all move together.

The government has to give tax breaks to companies if they want them to invest, and one requirement is to allow them to take out tax-free their original capital investment. This is only fair and therefore, they will pay corporation tax on their profits. Unfortunately, this means that the government will not collect any revenue for some years and our financial situation is critical.

So, I suggest that as soon as gold is produced and sold by the central bank, they should receive a commission of 2 percent. This concession will only make a marginal difference to the foreign investors who will still be credited with the commission deducted. With the price of gold at its highest level since 1988, they should reap big rewards and the country will get a substantial amount, possibly as early as 2005.

This amount, plus the sale of the MASINLOC power station for $562 million, plus the 98 centavos/kWh added to our electricity bills to halve the Napocor liability, plus a few revenue-raising bills before the Christmas recess, should be enough to persuade all 3 agencies not to downgrade us.

At last, we are moving in the right direction and our exports are up 12.3 percent, year on year. We deserve a break and I am hopeful that we will be given at least another 6 months.

During this period, the government will probably add another 98 centavos/kWh, which will not please end-users but will eliminate Napocor's huge losses so that it can be privatized. That will be a huge millstone lifted from the government. We might even get an upgrade.

In the U.S., the number of new jobs created was only 112,000 instead of the 200,000 expected, so the dollar hit another new low against the euro. Even so, the economy is growing at 3.9 percent, which is reasonable, and Chair Greenspan said, "the soft patch is behind us." This indicates a pick-up in the economy next year, and the near-certainty of another rate increase this month and more next year.

Readers who cut their loss on UCC and switched to PH are now making a profit, which will increase as time goes on. I always follow my second commandment. As soon as I am down 3 fluctuations, I am out. It pays to cut losses quickly and to run profits. Read Market Wizards by Jack Schwager.

I found my wife lying on the floor having difficulty breathing. I thought she was having a heart attack but it was only the adjusted Meralco bill.

Bayantel says rehab delay won't affect finances

By Clarissa S. Batino

BAYAN Telecommunications Inc., the phone company of the Lopez group, yesterday assured that snags in its debt-restructuring program would not affect its recovery and near-term prospects.

"We recognize the right of our creditors to question certain terms of the Regional Trial Court's ruling on Bayantel's rehabilitation plan and we really hope for a speedy resolution of the matter by the Court of Appeals so we can move forward and focus on sustaining the momentum of our business," Bayantel chief financial officer Salvador Tirona said in a statement.

Avenue Asia Capital Group, a major holder of Bayantel's $200 million in bonds, had asked the appellate court to fix the Lopez firm's debt at $471 million payable over 12 years instead of the $325 million payable over 19 years as approved by the Pasig court.

Bayantel creditors claimed the Pasig court based its June ruling on a proposal of the Lopez firm itself, believing it was "in the best position to ascertain the level of sustainable debt in light of its knowledge of its own actual operations, and that maintaining an unrealistic level of debt will defeat, rather than promote and achieve, the very purpose" of rehabilitation.

Avenue Asia alleged that Bayantel management "deliberately manipulated projections in an attempt to artificially reduce the amount of sustainable debt it can service."

Tirona said the Pasig court had approved in June a debt-restructuring plan that set out the payment of $325 million in debts within 19 years and the remaining "unsustainable" obligations be converted into equity to a maximum of 40 percent by the end of the 19th year.

Debts classified as "sustainable" would carry an annual interest of 3 percent for dollar-denominated and 6 percent for local obligations.

Avenue Asia said Bayantel's submissions were based "on out-of-date financial information and flawed assumptions, thus the amount of sustainable debt provided could not be relied upon."

It added that based on the phone firm's March 2003 projections, Bayantel could raise enough money to pay for at least $471 million in debts over 15 to 20 years.

Avenue Asia also questioned the court's decision to write off more than $34 million in penalties and interests. It claimed it could also own more than 70 percent of the company despite the 40-percent limit set by the Constitution.

Tirona stressed the viability of Bayantel's business and its capability to pay off its debts was not in question.

He said the company had settled P134 million in interest payments in September and was prepared to comply with the quarterly payments by the end of the month.

He said the company would use internally generated funds for the payment.

"We remain committed to adopt a rehabilitation plan that allows us to achieve sustainable growth and profitability while continuing to provide excellent service to all our customers," Tirona said.

Tirona said creditors should stop complaining because what mattered most was that Bayantel was starting to pay interest on its outstanding debt.

The Lopez-owned phone company stopped making interest payments to its creditors in 2001 due to mounting losses.

As of the third quarter, Bayantel sales reached P4.02 billion and was on track with its P5.4-billion revenue target. Next year, officials said revenue should grow by about 10 percent to hit P6 billion.

after the auction.

But for the 182- and 364-day debt paper, banks were not as interested as they were for the 91-day treasuries. However, Mendoza said the rate for the two maturities were still better than expected.

The six-month government securities fetched a rate of 8.877 percent, or 4.2 basis points higher than the 8.836 percent recorded in the previous auction two weeks ago.

But while banks sought for a higher risk premium, they still showed a relatively strong appetite for the 182-day bills as tenders stood at 3.76 billion, or P26 million more than the P3.5-billion offering.

The rate for the one-year debt paper also stood higher at 9.884 percent compared with the previous 9.725 percent.

Berkley, Family First celebrate 7th anniversary

MARKING its 7th year in the industry, pre-need top player Berkley International, Plans Inc (BIP) and its distributor, Family First Inc (FFI), adopt a new and dynamic customer - battletary that encapsulates the Berkley Group's reason for being - "Because your family comes first."

The multinational company, majority-owned by a US Fortune 500 property and casualty insurance firm (WR Berkley Corp), prides itself for having brought the pre-need product closer to the Filipinos reach through its pioneering and innovative selling strategy. Now a fixture of the local shopping scene in some of the biggest SM malls in Metro Manila, the promo and sales officers of Berkley and Family First have done much to put the once virtually unknown financial services provider in the map of who's who in the pre-need industry.

More than the feat of consistently being ranked among the Top 5 in terms of new sales since their 2nd year of operation, Berkley and Family First have paved the way for a better understanding by the Filipino layman of the benefits and intricacies of saving for his future. The sister companies are able to invite an average of close to seven thousand (7,000) walk-in clients monthly. These people have absolutely no obligation to buy anything but get a free lecture on the ins and outs of various savings products on top of getting a guaranteed gift. In just 7 years, Berkley and Family First have presented to a total of over half a million walk-in clients.

Berkley's new president, Alan Michael Rafe, stressed that operations will forge head-on now that the company is entering its 8th year in the Philippines despite what some sectors predict will be a sluggish economy. "This is a testament to our mother company's faith in the strength of the Filipinos. We are optimistic that Filipinos will prevail, as they always have, over the financial challenges now facing them," Rafe said, noting the greater need for savings at this time more than any other.

Rafe added that their new slogan, coined by an employee - Ronnie Sy - won in an internally conducted organization-wide contest in search of a motto to guide and inspire employees as they endeavor to secure the future of more and more Filipino families. "We are very optimistic about our 8th year. We shall continue to improve our products and services as our gesture of gratitude to the Filipino people for their overwhelming trust."

Berkley's climb from the tailend of the industry at no. 87 in 1997 to a perennial Top 5 player in the industry is an unprecedented record that egged on other establishments to follow their lead of bringing people en masse to the product instead of the other way around.

Brazilian Jiu Jitsu now in the Philippines

BRAZILIAN Jiu Jitsu (BJJ) is now making its way into our country as one of the latest and hottest sport. Known internationally for its fast-paced action and impressive reality based ground-fighting and grappling techniques, it has caught the attention of thousands of spectators and curious onlookers world-wide as well as our very own people.

In the past, Filipinos could only appreciate the skills of Brazilian Jiu Jitsu practitioners in action through video recordings of demonstrations and tournaments. Now, the action comes right in our own backyard. Through the selfless efforts of coach Stephen Kamphuis of the Kamphuis-Machado Brazilian Jiu Jitsu Club together with the kind cooperation of the UST Judo Varsity and South East Asia Grapplers' Association (Seaga), the 1st Philippine Brazilian Jiu Jitsu Friendly Open will be held at the UST Gymnasium on December 11, 2004 from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Coach Stephen Kamphuis originally from New Zealand and a former resident of Australia is a successful Judo player himself w/ the rank of Black Belt 2nd Dan and Black Belt in Brazilian Jiu Jitsu as well. He also had 3.5 years of training in Boxing. At the moment he is one of only two persons in Australia that holds the rank of Black Belt in BJJ and Judo as well as being the only one in the Philippines at the moment.

Aside from winning in Judo (11 years) and most of the BJJ Grappling Tournament in Australia for the past 7.5 years, he has also won Golds in three International BJJ competitions for the year 2003 and 2004 namely the 2004 Pan American BJJ Tournament (Seniors' Division) in Cal, USA; 2004 Asia Pacific Rim in Taiwan and the 2003 and 2004 World Masters and Seniors International in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

With these achievements, Stephen Kamphuis has always wanted to impart and share his knowledge of the BJJ Technique/Skills to practitioners who wish to learn. So having opted to stay in the Philippines for good, he opened up a small school called Kamphuis-Machado BJJ Philippines Club located at Wack Wack, Mandaluyong, teaching BJJ classes and Self Defence classes for Adults and Kids. It is also great for anyone who commonly lead such an inactive life and who want to train at their own pace which is much more exciting than just working out in a gym. The training environment is geared to safety, learning and enjoyment.

It has always been his goal to establish a strong team of players under the Machado school and establish a competition circuit for them to compete in. He sees that there are some talented athletes in the Philippines but lack venues and events to showcase their skills. In time he would want to see them compete with other countries in the South East Asia region and make Philippines, with its strong martial Arts culture, famous in Brazilian Jiu Jitsu in South East Asia.

OIL DEREGULATION LAW

Review seen to drive away investments

By Abigail L. Ho

A REVIEW of existing laws governing the deregulated downstream oil industry is seen to adversely affect the way potential investors perceive the country's investment environment, an oil industry executive said.

Philippine Institute of Petroleum executive director Reynaldo Marquez said in an interview that prospective investors might shy away from the country given the perception that rules here could be changed any time.

"In general, if you adopt a law, especially one affecting big investments, you can't change the rules in the middle of the game. Many investors went into the industry under existing laws and business conditions," he told reporters. "My worry is that this review will have bad effects on investments, not just in the oil industry."

Energy Secretary Vincent Perez said last week he would recommend to Malacañang an "independent review" of Republic Act No. 8479, or the Downstream Oil Industry Deregulation Act of 1998, to determine whether or not changes on the existing law was needed.

He said the public has the perception that the deregulated oil industry was to blame for the unmitigated rise in oil prices in the past months.

An independent review of the law, with all the stakeholder consultations that would be held to support it, would likely create a "renewed consensus on the future of the downstream oil industry," he said.

But Marquez said changes in the current law, if there would be any, would not guarantee a drop in the local prices of local petroleum products.

Instead of doing any good, the review might just drive away potential investments that the country needed to fuel its economic growth.

"There's no such thing as a policy without problems. There's no problem with doing a review, but we desperately need new investments. Changing the rules in the middle of the game will not help us attract those new investments," he said.

Perez declined to reveal the details of his recommendation, saying that the independent review body would not involve any Department of Energy official.

Various militant groups, including party-list group Anakpawis and the Bagong Alyansang Makabayan, have been very open in their call for the repeal of the Oil Deregulation Law.

They reasoned that this law was the very root of the country's problems regarding high oil prices as it allowed local oil firms to adjust their prices, usually upward, without consulting the government.

RP to start importing rice in Jan.

By Christine A. Gayican

THE COUNTRY will import 320,000 metric tons of rice in the first week of January to boost the national buffer stock that has been eaten up by government relief operations in typhoon-stricken areas.

National Food Authority Administrator Gregorio Y. Tan said in an interview yesterday that the country's rice inventory was now down to 6.5 million bags, or good for only 12 days. The country's average rice requirement was placed at 27,000 metric tons daily.

"It has become difficult to bring supplies from rice producing areas such as Ilocos, Cagayan and Nueva Ecija as major roads have not been passable," he said.

Tan said the NFA needed to buy rice from the international market as early as January to prevent any supply shortage next year, particularly in view of the expected delay in the summer harvest.

"The successive typhoons that hit the country had affected the palay cropping and planting schedules next year," he said.

He admitted that the current tight rice supply situation in the world market might affect the cost of the country's imports.

The current average price in the world market was placed at between $320 and $350 per metric ton, as leading exporters were keeping supplies for their growing domestic demand.

This year's rice importation reached 985,000 metric tons amounting to P13 billion.

DATA WEAKER THAN EXPECTED

US jobs weigh on Asian stocks; oil weak

SINGAPORE—Dollar and oil price weakness dominated Asian trading on Monday, sending Asian export and resource shares down, but strength in banking stocks supported some Asian stock markets.

Weaker than expected jobs data from the United States had the dollar struggling to hold above a new euro low struck in New York on Friday. Worries about the United States economy have driven the dollar to record euro lows in 8 of the past 9 sessions.

Top Asian exporters fell in sympathy with the dollar.

Toyota Motor Co. lost 1.54 percent. South Korea's Samsung Electronics fell 1.5 percent as the won reached a seven-year high against the dollar.

MSCI's non-Japan index of Asian shares hit its highest level in nearly 5 years, helped by strength in its health care subindex. World stocks as measured by the MSCI edged up 0.17 percent.

"The jobs data brought the market's focus back to the dollar's weakness," said Kikuko Takeda, currency analyst at Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi. "I think we should be prepared to see another round of dollar selling."

Takeda added that the market would likely target a fall towards 100 yen and a rise in the euro to $1.35.

Crude oil stood just above $42 a barrel, after sliding 14 percent last week. Forecasts for a mild US winter piled on the selling pressure in the United States on Friday after an increase in US fuel stocks on Wednesday set off a wave of selling.

Weakening oil prices weighed on resource stocks. China's CNOOC fell 1.2 percent.

The dollar was at around 102.15 yen compared with 102.10 in late US trade on Friday, underpinned by a view that the Bank of Japan may step in to stem the yen's rise.

The euro was at $1.3438, versus 1.3454 in New York and a record high of 1.3461 marked on Friday. Sterling stood at $1.9404 after matching a 12-year peak of 1.9442 earlier in the day. Gold edged up in line with the dollar's weakness.

The dollar tumbled across the board on Friday after US non-farm payrolls rose 112,000 in November, well below economists' median forecast for a rise of 180,000. The jobless rate was 5.4 percent, matching forecasts.

Despite the weak data, a Reuters poll taken after the figures were released found that all 20 primary dealers surveyed expected the US Federal Reserve to raise its key interest rate by a quarter percentage point to 2.25 percent at its December meeting.

Sixteen of the 20 looked for another quarter-point tightening in February.

Tokyo's benchmark Nikkei average was down 0.6 percent at the mid-session close at 11,011.02, but Hong Kong's Hang Seng was ahead 0.44 percent at 14,274.57, supported by strong banks.

Strength in bank shares supported main indexes in some markets. Australia's S&P ASX 200 was up 0.5 percent at a new record, led by banks like ANZ, up 1.1 percent, in anticipation there will be no early interest rate rise in Australia.

Singapore's Straits Times fell 0.03 percent while Taiwan's benchmark index added 0.38 percent, underpinned by strong banking stocks. South Korea's KOSPI fell 0.82 percent.

United States oil prices eased 2 cents to $42.52, near a three month low of $42.05 struck on Friday. Reuters

US urged to fix deficit to halt dollar drop

PARIS—The United States must fix its deficits to halt a further decline of the dollar, Gerrit Zalm, Dutch finance minister and current chair of the Eurozone's finance ministers, said in an interview with French newspaper Les Echos.

"A good response (to the drop of the dollar) without doubt is to wait until the United States correct their deficits," Zalm said in the interview, which was released on Sunday prior to publication in the paper's Monday edition.

"A declaration from Washington on this would be very useful because it's the budget deficit and American trade deficit which explain the weakness of the dollar," said Zalm, whose country holds the European Union's rotating presidency.

The US government's budget deficit is almost 4 percent of the gross domestic product.

Mounting concerns about the dollar's plunge, which pushed the British pound to a 12-year high last week above $1.94 and the euro to a fresh record, are likely to be voiced when Eurozone finance ministers meet in Brussels.

Possible intervention by the European Central Bank to support the US currency by buying dollars would hardly be effective, Zalm said in the interview. He also dismissed cutting Eurozone interest rates as a possible solution when "inflation is returning."

The ECB on Thursday left interest rates unchanged at 2 percent.

"In the end, let's not forget that the drop of the dollar has a positive effect on our petrol bill and therefore on inflation," Zalm said. Reuters

Opec to shift deposits from dollars to euros

LONDON—Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have cut the share of their deposits denominated in dollars by over 13 percentage points in the last three years, mainly to the euro's advantage, the Bank for International Settlements said on Sunday.

In its latest quarterly report, the BIS—a forum for world central banks—attributed the trend partly to US interest rates having fallen below eurozone levels.

The report said US dollar-denominated deposits fell to 61.5 percent of total deposits by Opec members in the second quarter of 2004 from 75 percent in the third quarter of 2001.

The share of euro-denominated deposits rose to 20 percent from 12 percent over the same period.

The Basel-based bank is cautious about its findings, noting less oil revenues seem to have gone into the international banking system recently but saying nevertheless there had been a "subtle but noticeable" shift in the composition of deposits in the past three years.

"Since the third quarter of 2001, oil revenue seems to have been channeled increasingly into euro and other currency deposits," the BIS said.

"This shift out of US dollars probably reflected to some extent the relative change in interest rates in the United States and the euro area since 1998."

The BIS said US short term interest rates were on average 2.1 percentage points higher than their euro equivalent between December 1998 and March 2001, but 1.3 percentage points lower on average between April 2001 and June 2004. Reuters

Tips in buying home fitness machines

BUYING home fitness equipment can be one of the best investments you can make for your health.

You can fit exercise into your busy schedule and use the equipment even when the weather is bad. The whole family can also get fit together.

WELL AND GOOD

Tina Juan

However, if you buy on impulse, home fitness machines can turn into expensive dust-collectors. Here are tips from Idea, the Association of Fitness Professionals, to help make you a smart buyer.

Match the machine to your needs.

If you enjoy walking, a treadmill will suit you better than a stationary bike, even if it is much cheaper.

That is why garage sales often have cross-country skiing machines on offer. Unless people live in Nordic countries, how many really know how to enjoy cross-country skiing?

Consider the space you have.

Take actual measurements instead of "I think it will fit in the family room." There are space-saving or portable equipment suitable for a small house. A stepper or stationary bike, for example, takes up less room than a treadmill. But there are also foldable home treadmills.

Put safety first.

Unless you hire a personal trainer, you are going to exercise without supervision so safety is an important issue. Free weight stations like a bench press should have safety racks in case the barbell falls.

Motorized treadmills should have accessible emergency stop buttons. The machine should place your body where it is protected from moving parts when you are using it. If buying a multi-gym, try all the stations and imagine all possible safety scenarios.

Think of physical limitations.

If you have a knee injury or a bad back, get special advice from a sports medicine doctor or a fitness professional before buying the latest fitness gadget.

Machine should be versatile, flexible.

Can it handle different body types? Can a man and woman use it equally well? Take note if your family is also going to be using the machine. Does it offer different levels of challenge? The machine should be able to still present you with a challenge when your skills and stamina improve.

Take a closer look

Examine the machine physically. It should look and feel sturdy, not flimsy, with a smooth finish and clean welding. Upholstery must be firm and well-stitched.

If making an expensive purchase, try to talk to people who have used the equipment for a few years and see how their machines are holding up.

Avoid fast or sight-unseen purchases.

Do not buy fitness equipment you have not tried or tried only briefly. Gregory Flores, personal training consultant for Idea, says, "Almost any treadmill feels fine during the first few minutes. Only when doing a longer workout will you notice things like excessive vibration and noise. For cardio machines, spend at least 20 minutes trying different programs. For strength equipment, do a set of 10 repetitions."

Reliable fitness companies will deliver a demonstration model for you to try at home for several days or invite you to their showroom for a 30- to 40-minute workout.

Do not buy equipment from a dealer who lets you try their machine for just a few minutes. They may not want you to discover their product's shortcomings.

Weigh price versus quality.

A whole range of fitness machines is available in the Philippines, from cheap to midrange and top-of-the-line expensive. As with any product, you get what you pay for. The only thing going for the cheaper models is the price. Buy the best your budget can afford.

One woman I know computed the cost of all the cheap fitness machines she has bought through the years and realized that, for that amount, she could have bought not just one but two top-of-the-line treadmills.

Fitness equipment with computerized consoles are the most expensive but offer motivational information like heart rate, elapsed time, total calories burned, speed (km/hr on treadmills, floors per minute on steppers, revolution per minute on bikes). They can automatically control resistance to make your workout harder

WHEN super close pals set aside one big day to celebrate jointly their dazzling lives, you can expect a fun, rip-roaring time, palanggas. And that's exactly what we all had.

Two super best friends, mega restaurateur Maritel Nievera-Shani of the popular, always consistent Cabalen chain, and our very own super wonder woman, PR personality Susan Joven, president of Visions & Expressions, had a fantastic, fun joint birthday celebration at everyone's favorite restaurant, the Cirkulo, with close pals and business associates.

Both gals usually try to forget their birthdays for one reason or another, but this year was an exception. Most members of their ear-ring gang insisted "you both better have a joint party this time." Well, dahlings, they did.

The gang came in full hungry force, including Sen. Kiko Pangilinan; a radiant Loren Legarda; SP Sumulong and wife Annette; popular couple, restaurateur Riki Dee, with wife Beng, one of Manila's best-dressed; our town's in demand new guards, Sander and Mons Tantoco; my favorite pepperoni, fun Pepper Teehankee; and Press Undersecretary Robert Mananquil. Foreign Secretary Alberto Romulo and his lovely wife, Lovely Tecson R., dashed in and stayed for a bit.

Letting it all hang out and having a great time away from their corporate environment were SSI EVP-GM Anton T. Huang; Ayala's Winnie Nazareth, Rowena Tomeldan and Cristy Comia, and brilliant gentleman for all seasons, Hans Sy.

Late arrivals were my boss, Chelo Formoso, and moi. Both of us couldn't get enough of the yum-yummy phyllo pastry triangles with spinach, blue cheese and pine nuts, one of several appetizers; not to mention the no-die-for buffet dinner. Paella Cirkulo—chorizo, duck and pork tenderloin in saffron seasoned rice; Mero à la Navarro—oven-roasted Chilean sea bass wrapped in jamon serrano with balsamic vinegar syrup; and slow-roasted US Beef Belly—garlic and black pepper crust, with portobello mushrooms and balsamic shallots that are among the superb selections the always consistent El Cirkulo Resto is noted for, thanks to that genius of a chef, Jay Gamboa, and his sister, adorable Malou Gamboa, who made sure we had enough to eat and drink. We surely did, palanggas.

After dinner, guitarist/singer Joel Co hit the strings. It was no surprise that some frustrated singers belted out a few songs—some on key, others off-key. Oh well, no guts, no glory, di bala?

Hey, Susan and Maritel, here's to more fun birthday bashes like this. Cheers palanggas.

Agency to beat

"DDB, the world's true avant-garde agency, which, in the '60s spun the idea that being second best or even being ugly made for an edgy campaign (think Avis' all-time tagline winner, "We try harder") has found itself positioned to become the agency to beat this side of the world again."

How's that for the opening of an invite I received, palanggas. So there I was at the packed Mandarin Captain's Bar watching that hot chair of DDB Asia, Aaron Lau, being appointed CEO of the Asia region, which, I was told, was one of Aaron's favorite areas of responsibility.

Expanding DDB Worldwide's integrated services and operations in Asia was the topic du jour. Appropriately enough, the heavy-weight gang of Cosmo Manille's captains of industries were treated to great sounds, excellent wines and a buffet with dishes from the East and West symbolizing the fusion of DDB Worldwide. It has spread to almost all the seven continents and covers even the Slovak Republic, would you believe?

Host TV glam gal Ces Drilon introduced young DDB Philippines chair Lito de Joya and entrepreneur Gil Chua that started the ball rolling. We listened to a fearless forecast of things to come in 2005.

University of Asia & the Pacific's Bernardo Villegas, the prophet of boom, gave an optimistic business picture but also warned business leaders "to think outside the political box to achieve progress for all." International geomancer Joseph Chau happily told us "that now being the year of the monkey, a sixth wave of prosperity is in store for this country."

Après that, it was time to really party with the now-band Parliament Syndicate taking center stage, getting those hard-core business personalities to rock the floor, dahlings.

As we sipped the excellent Cabernet, I bumped into hotshot Polly Nazarena, prexy of PLDT/Smart; man for all seasons, MTV's Francis Lumen; business entrepreneur Philip Lhuiller; media man Mike Enriquez; and Cocktails man Vic Agustín, plus lots of shiny, cool personas like them.

Who says big boys don't know how to have real fun? Think again, buddy.

Absolute fun

Everyone agreed, palanggas, that it was a smashing night of partying when Absolut vodka, famous for affairs of fashion and art, presented "Absolut label—the country collection," featuring 10 extraordinarily exciting pieces designed by artists from all over the world.

Being the in place for launches, fashion shows and what have you, the Ayala Museum was the venue for the unveiling of the newest fashion project of Absolut—colorful eye-catching T-shirts by top designers from France, Turkey, Sweden, Spain, Greece, Poland, Brazil, Russia, Germany and Argentina.

In the last 18 years, Absolut has helped fashion designers from Gianni Versace to Jean Paul Gaultier. The swinging partnership between the popular Swedish vodka brand and fashionistas has been showcased in media advertising, as well as in a yearly fashion calendar featuring up-and-coming designers, proudly presenting the Absolut label, natch.

"I cannot describe the collection as anything less than extraordinarily exciting. The designers have really outdone themselves and managed to portray the creativity of Absolut brand from an Absolut perspective, (putting) an element of their own country into the design... this is the first time we have ever produced a limited edition of designs for Absolut," said a très pleased Michael Persson, market communications director of the Absolut Company in Stockholm, no less, palanggas. This must have limited edition collection has 150 T-shirts from each designer.

Brilliant stylist Michael Salientes, together with equally creative director Ariel Lozada, made sure that the Absolut label's country collection had everyone wanting to see more. We did.

Needless to say, vivacious Annie Ringor of Bridges@com, Creative Ideas and Strategies spent the entire evening looking pleased as punch, dahlings.

"WE loved all the T-shirts," said Shu Uemura's Tina Tinko and best-dressed gal Wendy Puyat-Hotung.

JOHNN Mert (JM) was only 23 when he met a fatal accident at the South Luzon Expressway in August on his way home to Ayala Alabang.

During his wake, he appeared clearly to his half brother, Joshenn, 10, to whom he was very close. "I saw him standing at the corner of the funeral chapel where his body lay. He was wearing a gray shirt," said Joshenn.

I asked Joshenn if his dead brother, JM, said anything to him. He nodded yes. "He told me to take care of our Mom."

Since then, the young Joshenn could see and talk to his brother JM every day, as if he never died. For him, it was a natural and ordinary thing.

On the second day of JM's death, during Mass at the funeral parlor, Joshenn saw his elder brother, this time wearing a white shirt.

Hello, not goodbye

On the third day, at the wake, Joshenn saw his dead brother kissing his mother and several other relatives. It was more like greeting them than saying goodbye.

When JM's friends came to the wake, pictures were taken. In one of the pictures, JM could be seen sitting with them.

That was when the mother, Gigi, decided to seek my help to explain what's happening to her young son Joshenn, and what she should do about it.

Elvie Flores of the American Academy of Family Medicine, whose group invited me several times to lecture on alternative healing, arranged a meeting between me and her niece, Gigi the mother of Joshenn and JM.

INNER AWARENESS

Jaime T. Licaucó

During lunch in November at the Tower Club in Makati, I learned more fascinating details of the interactions between Joshenn and his departed brother JM. Present during that meeting were Gigi, Elvie Flores, Gigi's mother Fe, and four of Gigi's six children. Cops, excuse me, five of six!

No empty chair

Joshenn said his dead brother JM was also there seated on the empty chair to his right. I was seated to Joshenn's left.

I asked how JM looked, and Joshenn replied: "He is seated beside me with his two hands on his stomach. He is wearing a white shirt." That's how JM usually sat on a chair.

When the picture at the wake showed JM's face, his friends at first didn't believe he was there with them. They asked Joshenn to ask JM if there's any message for them. Joshenn said JM told him to tel, one of his friends "to brush your teeth."

Everybody laughed because JM used to tell that to his friend when he was alive. Of course, Joshenn never knew about that because he never went with the group. The friends were convinced JM was really with them.

During lunch, JM told Joshenn their grandfather was also in that picture. We asked Joshenn to ask JM to show where the grandfather was. Joshenn got the picture from me, brought it in front of the empty chair on his right, as if showing it to somebody, and then pointed to a spot beside JM in the picture.

When I looked at it, that's when I saw another head, looking sideways. This other phantom figure might not be visible on the printed reproduction of the picture, but it was quite clear in the original when you concentrated on it.

Earning his wings

On the first day of the wake, JM told Joshenn to tell everybody he needed their prayers to earn his wings. So they prayed for him every day. The next day, Joshenn saw his brother wearing white and with large wings like an angel. In succeeding days, he saw him flying in the air. He had earned his wings!

I took the opportunity to ask JM, through Joshenn, a question that had been bugging me for years. Why do some people see angels without wings and others with wings? What's the difference?

Joshenn leaned to his right and whispered my question to his brother whom he alone could see.

"Kaya says it depends on the mind of the individual," Joshenn said. That made a lot of sense to me, I said. Those who felt they ought to have wings grew wings.

I explained to the group that in the astral plane or in the spirit world our thoughts became realities. So if they thought angels should have wings, they would have wings.

Before we parted, I asked Gigi if I could use the photo she gave me in a book on spirit photos that I was writing. She told Joshenn, "Ask him if he will allow it." After Joshenn asked his brother, he said, "Brother says it's okay. You may use the photo in your book."

When we were walking to the elevator, several of us noticed that Joshenn's right hand was extended further away from him, as if somebody was holding it. Elvie whispered to my ear: "Look, JM is holding Joshenn's hand!"

Tips in buying home fitness machines

Flores suggests trying the best and most expensive equipment first even if you can't afford it so you know what quality features to look for. Then, you will know what features you are willing to give up when you try lower priced models. Think about after-sales service.

Buying from a local distributor of "brand name" fitness equipment is more reliable in the long run because you can have warranties (one to two years) and a service team with technical know-how and replacement parts should anything go wrong. However, do make sure the company or store you buy from is really committed to after-sales service and is not just giving you lip service.

If you are buying an expensive piece of fitness equipment like a treadmill, ask to meet the service team. You may discover that the "team" does not exist or consists of one solitary part-time technician whose real job is to fix television

Be careful when buying electronic/computerized fitness equipment abroad. It may be cheaper than buying from a local distributor but you will be helpless if something goes wrong.

Even if you can bring in the spare parts, you will have a hard time finding a technician specifically trained for that machine. You may also need a gigantic transformer because equipment purchased abroad often uses 110 volts instead of our standard 220. This factor alone can shorten the life of your machine.

EXERCISE OF THE WEEK

Lateral push-up

THIS advance exercise uses your own body weight as resistance to strengthen and firm up the chest, triceps (back of the arms) as well as abs and waist.

Equipment:

Exercise mat.

Exercise technique:

1. Lie sideways on a mat with your legs together in alignment with your shoulders, head and neck.

2. Place the top hand on the mat in front of your chest with fingers facing your head. Wrap your other arm around your waist. Hold your neck in line with your spine.

3. Contract your chest and press down into the mat to push up laterally.

4. Slowly return to starting position.

5. Do the desired number of repetitions then repeat on the other side.

Performance tips:

1. This is an advance exercise and should not be attempted by beginners.

2. Keep your neck lengthened and pull your shoulders away from your ears.

3. There is no need to straighten the working arm fully to reap the benefits of this exercise, although people who have the strength in their chest/triceps plus enough flexibility in the sides of the body will be able to do so.

4. This exercise can be stressful on the wrists. After finishing the desired repetitions, flip your wrists up and down and make alternating circles to relieve the pressure.

Repetitions:

Do five to 10 repetitions per side.

What symptoms differentiate a person under the influence of illegal drugs, like cocaine or ecstasy, from a person intoxicated by alcohol?

A person under the influence of alcohol is easier to be identified than that of a cocaine, ecstasy or a shabu user. Cocaine or shabu users can seemingly be normal in their day to day routine, but as their usage worsens, carelessness sets in and their social and working habits become affected. Tardiness, missed deadlines, unexplained absences and changes in attitudes are also observed. Irritability over trivial matters is common, along with mood swings and untidiness. Cocaine, shabu and ecstasy users were also observed to be more aggressive and flirtatious towards the opposite sex. A "Hero Complex" was also noted among heavy users.

On the other hand, alcohol is a central nervous system (CNS) depressant. Intoxication can cause incoordination, tremors, ataxia (unsteady or shaky movements) confusion, stupor, coma and even death at higher blood alcohol levels. Chronic alcohol use produces CNS dependence, thus during withdrawal stage, tremors, jitters, seizures can occur. More often one encounters a "poly", a person who mixes alcohol and drug use.

Moderation is the best diet

DIET fads are fashionable for a moment, but what happens afterward?

Most diet fads deprive the body of basic nutrients. Whether it's carbohydrate, protein or fat, there is a deprivation of sorts. Most nutritionists and dietitians are against dieting simply because it's fashionable.

The best diet, when all is said and done, is moderation though the term is subject to personal interpretation. It can mean different things to different people with different needs.

Let's take a look at basic nutrients to appreciate them better.

Meat—Though a rich source of iron, meat can make people eat twice the protein the body needs. Too much protein can damage the kidney and liver.

Red meat, if not lean, is high in saturated fat and has been linked to heart disease and cancer.

Don't: Overdo meat consumption. Do: Indulge if you must on your favorite roast beef, steak or cheeseburger but only twice a month.

Fish—There is fish and there is fish. But only fish like the humble sardine can actually help your heart. Rich in Omega-3, it is best for health maintenance. Do: Buy more fish like sardines, tuna, mackerel, cod. Don't: Overcook your fish, or your food, for that matter, to preserve nutrients.

Vegetables—Broccoli and cauliflower are nutrient-rich vegetables with antioxidants to boost the immune system.

Sprouts—mango, alfalfa, Brussels—are good for the body. Do: Think green as often as you can. Have a serving of veggies first before meat or carbohydrates.

Soybean has plant estrogens called isoflavones that can help lower blood lipid levels, relieve symptoms of menopause and lower risk of hormone-related cancers. Do: Eat tofu. If you don't like it, get fresh soybean and steam the "edamame." Good snack food. Or, drink soy milk every day.

Juices—If you don't like to eat veggies, consider juicing up. A glass of tomato juice daily is enough to get you started.

Soups—For a healthier family meal, have soups, stews and sauces to include a variety of vegetables. Do: Look for interesting ways to add veggies to your diet.

Here is the recipe for my popular barley soup:

1 c peeled raw barley pearls (Quaker brand available in supermarkets or organic brand at Healthy Options)

5 c water/chicken stock
1 can whole/crushed peeled tomatoes
2 tsp garlic

INSIDE OUT

Cory Quirino

- 1 tsp onion
- 2 tsp fresh or dried basil
- 1 tsp dried or fresh oregano
- 3 tsp extra virgin olive oil
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 1/4 c chopped celery
- 1/4 c chopped carrot
- 1/4 c chopped Baguio beans
- 1/4 c chopped broccoli/cauliflower
- 1/4 c chopped potato
- 1/4 c shredded/cooked chicken breast meat (optional)

Boil 1 whole chicken breast in low fire for 30 minutes. Once chicken stock is done, remove chicken breast and shred the meat. Add to vegetables as you sauté. Vegetables should only be half-cooked. Add barley to chicken stock. Boil in low fire for 1 hour. Add tomatoes, drained. Cook in low fire for 15 minutes until boiling. Add the vegetable mixture to the barley chicken stock. Throw in the basil and oregano. Cook for another 45 minutes to 1 hour in low fire. Upon serving, add 2 tsp of grated parmesan cheese (optional). Serve hot with french bread.

Carbohydrates—Your body needs carbs to maintain your energy level. While the most popular carbs in Western diets is potato, it is often served overdressed with gravy, sour cream, bacon, butter, etc. Do: Eat potato as simply as you can. The Asian staple, rice, is good for the health but only in moderation. Have only one cup per meal. If you are dieting, have half a cup.

Diet tip

Eat less, move more. Or eat fewer calories, burn more calories. Exercise three times a week. Do: Eat smaller portions. Over-sized portions lead to weight gain. Undersized portions lead to weight loss.

Beauty regimen

Frown less. Repeated raising and bunching of eyebrows will produce unbecoming lines. Try putting scotch tape on your forehead and practice not frowning for an hour. Each time you forget, the tape will remind you to stay cool, calm and collected.

Affirmation

"I am my brightest smile because the Universe smiles at me." Love and light!

UPLB starts annual bloodletting

THE DUGONG Alay-Dugong Buhay was launched at the University of the Philippines Los Baños (UPLB) in 1998 to help an employee with a kidney problem.

Lolita Dikitanan, an employee at the UPLB Office of Student Affairs, had a kidney problem that required weekly blood transfusions at UP-Philippine General Hospital in Manila.

Her situation prompted Dr. Vivian A. Gonzales, then UPLB dean of students, to start a bloodletting project through her Students' Transformation and Enrichment for Truth-Values Integration and Promotion (STET-VIP) program.

Dr. Armando Cruzostomo, then PGH assistant director for health operations, sent his staff to UPLB for the first Dugong Alay-Dugong Buhay bloodletting in 1998.

Now a civic welfare training service (CWTS) component of the National Service Training Program (NSTP), STET-VIP has more than 500 affiliate schools with 800,000 students. Starting this year, its volunteers will donate blood to the Philippine National Red Cross (PNRC) during the annual Dugong Alay-Dugong Buhay Week, Dec. 5-12.

TAHANANG Walang Hagdanan promotes recycling through a P50 souvenir kit that includes a mirror made from recycled carton.

TAHANAN workers now use Tetra Pak carton boards for items that were made of wood before like desk organizers, picture frames, tables, chairs, etc.

A BAR stool allows Tahanan workers to combine metal with Tetra Pak carton boards.

Building from trash

Text and photos by Linda B. Bolido

THE PACKAGE that holds your milk or juice or tomato sauce is now also a table, a chair, a tray and even a key holder.

Pretty soon it may even be a wall or a door or a cabinet in some modest home. In fact, a few Latin American houses have already started substituting boards made from the recycled packages for plywood.

Without fanfare, Tetra Pak, the multinational company that introduced the revolutionary lightweight and easy-to-handle cartons now used to package a broad range of products, has started a recycling program in the Philippines that links up students, consumers, the handicapped and streetchildren while making the environment just a little less cluttered.

The initiative draws on technology and experience from other countries. "Care and Share," Tetra Pak's recycling program, has two components. A collection/retrieval campaign, now involving 50 private schools, represents the "Care" part. Students in the institutions are being taught to care for the environment by recycling Tetra Pak packages.

Special bins

The campaign was launched in 2002 with eight schools participating. Special bins have been installed in schools where faculty and students can put the cartons.

A still little-known effort to get consumers involved in the campaign has started in the Makati commercial center with collection bins installed in a couple of supermarkets.

The other aspect of the program, Share with the Less Fortunate, has provided jobs to former streetchildren, who became wards of the Tuloy sa Don Bosco shelter set up by Fr. Rocky Evangelista. The program has also provided new money-earning opportunities for the disabled workers at the Tahanang Walang Hagdanan Inc., who are now turning the boards made from Tetra Pak packages into items like picture frames, organizers and small furniture. The items have added to the list of products the institution sells to help sustain its operations.

Tetra Pak's partner in breathing new life into discarded packages—and in providing gainful employment to the streetchildren—is the Trans-National Paper Corporation. The company started as a publishing concern before going into the paper recycling business.

Using technology developed in Germany, the company bought a machine from India that had now been installed in its manufacturing plant in Tanza, Cavite.

Lorenzo P. Ligot of the Tanza plant said, when they agreed to team up with Tetra Pak in the campaign, all they asked was assurance that they would have enough materials to work with and they would get help in marketing the product.

Simple technology

The company, which has eight Tuloy wards working in the Tanza plant at the moment, easily accommodated the recycling of used Tetra Pak cartons without a lot of retraining involved. The process begins with the shredding of the packages. Shredded pieces are soaked in water then placed in a mold the size of a full-length board before passing through the machine that basically just dries it.

Ligot said boards from the packages contained exactly the same elements that the original cartons had. No chemicals were added in the process, making it safe for both workers in the plant and the end user. What bound the shreds together was the plastic that was already one of the components of the original package. When heated, the plastic melted and spread, binding the other components.

At the Tanza plant, the company has made boards in the standard width and length of plywood—four by eight feet—and with different thickness, too: 4 mm, 6 mm, 12 mm and 18 mm.

Ligot said the Habitat for Humanity had used the boards for the doors of some of the low-cost houses it was building. The company, of course, would like to see the board used in more construction projects.

Ligot said the material was "cheaper than plywood, would not warp and was resistant to termites." Painting is also optional as the board retains the colors of the packages used and, in fact, comes out with unintended patterns. The board would also be a good substitute for wallpaper, Ligot added, because it was very flat when installed, eliminating the problem of bumps.

Challenge

In fact, the flatness has become a challenge to Tahanan. A customer, who has seen its bar stool and table, wants a set but with the backrest more rounded. Joy Cevallos-Garcia, Tahanan's chief executive officer, hoped one of Tetra Pak's offices abroad had already come up with the technology to make that happen.

Tahanan workers had so far turned the boards into picture frames, trays, key chains, desk organizers and clocks, pen holders, magazine racks, tables and chairs. Garcia said she was drawn to the Tetra Pak initiative because "it helped clean the environment." Already working with metal and wood, the institution merely combined the recycled product with their raw materials.

Products made from the boards are sold not just at the Tahanan gift shop but also in its own monthly bazaars and other events where it participates.

Tahanan also helps spread the good word about Tetra Pak carton recycling. Visitors can get a P50 souvenir kit at the gift shop that includes a mirror whose frame is made of recycled carton board.

Aside from its collection, campaign, Marly C. Gutierrez, communications and environment manager, said the company also organized puppet shows in schools to spread the recycling message of recycling in an entertaining way. "We also have videos on environment/recycling... (and will be distributing) a teacher's guide..." she said.

The company is a consistent supporter of the Museo Pambata, and has a Tetra Pak Craft Room at the museum. For several years now, it has co-sponsored with the museum children's art contests using Tetra Pak packages.

Back-up generators with four-day fuel supply ensure continued operation of all systems in the event of power interruption," adds architect Dan Lechaucó.

Patient safety

Being a public facility that is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, security is of paramount importance.

Closed circuit television sets can be found in key areas. A watchman tour system monitors the movement of all security personnel, ensuring proper and complete coverage. Alarms are also connected to doors meant for exiting the facility to ensure that these are not used for uncontrolled entry.

In further consideration of patient safety, positive/negative pressure zoning was developed to ensure that contaminated air exits the building and does not re-circulate.

"All operating rooms employ laminar flow and Hepa filtration systems that preserve the sterility of these sensitive units. In addition, Level 5 anti-bacterial paint has been used as added protection in all sterile areas," says Dr. Mediadora Saniel, head of medical services group.

Soothing contrast

Landscaped gardens in some areas provide a soothing contrast to the concrete and steel structure.

The hues of the interiors exude tranquility. All patient rooms have been designed to simulate a home environment. Comfortable waiting areas are available for patients and their companions.

Other facilities, including banks and ATMs, coffee shops, a convenience store, gift and flower shops, beauty salon, gym and various food establishments can also be found within the complex.

"Our vision is to be the leader in shaping how Filipinos feel, think and behave about health as well as how health services are accessed by and delivered to them," says Dr. Bengzon.

"We understand the role of a hospital as not merely attending to the needs of the sick but as providing for the continuum of health needs—prevention, promotion, diagnosis and treatment."

UST, La Salle win badminton championships

By Dexter R. Matilla
Contributor

ALFREDO Matillon Jr. never felt such pressure in his life. He had just lost the first set of his singles match. He needed to win the next two for University of Santo Tomas to get the JVC Inter-collegiate Men's Badminton Championship.

"I was almost losing hope and feeling desperate," Matillon said. But, though the second set was tough, he managed to tie the game and force a rubber match. Matillon rode the momentum of his second-set win and pulled off a miraculous comeback.

Morale booster

Matillon, a former M.I. Little Olympics silver medalist, said their team's victory gave them a better chance in the coming badminton tournament of the University Athletic Association of the Philippines (UAAP) as it boosted the players' morale and inspired them to strive better.

The third-year AB Communication Arts student was introduced to badminton by his father 10 years ago. "My father told me to join a badminton training camp in Crame," Matillon said. "I liked it and I became very dedicated."

The recent JVC tournament was very memorable for him as he "was the team's anchor." Before that, the most memorable for him was when he became the men's champion in the Millennium Palara ng Bayan in General Santos City four years ago, winning P50,000.

His team's win in the recent JVC tournament meant a trip to Boracay, P50,000, trophy and medals, Siemens Mobile Phones, JVC Digital Cameras, Gosen Rackets and Shuttlecocks, Alaska gift packs and Rudy Project products.

Matillon, a national team member, said while he would continue playing badminton after college, his priority would be his career.

Double trouble

Sisters Paula and Therine Chan turned heads not only for their looks but also for their chemistry on the court, which was bad news for their opponents during the JVC championships.

The sisters helped De La Salle University's women's badminton contingent breeze through the tournament, scoring a masterful victory over last season's UAAP champion, Ateneo de Manila University.

"For me personally, parang preview na ito nang mangyayari sa UAAP," said Paula, 21, DLSU's team captain of four years. "Our teammate Paula Obañana had a knee injury last year but now, even if she's still (recovering), she played well and helped us win."

Paula said their anxieties about playing against Ateneo vanished after Obañana won the first singles match.

The Chan sisters exuded confidence as they raced to a commanding 12-1 advantage and never looked back. DLSU's victory earned the team a trip to Boracay, P50,000, trophy and medals, Siemens Mobile Phones, JVC Digital Cameras, Gosen Rackets and Shuttlecocks, Alaska gift packs, Lactacyd gift packs and Rudy Project products.

Though they are becoming one of the best tandems in local amateur badminton, the sisters said they did not want to play the sport when they were younger.

"In 1998, our dad told us to join Milo's badminton summer training camp," Paula said. "Ayaw namin nung simula kasi parang nakakatamad. Pero sabi ng dad namin, subukan lang... at kung magustuhan... ituloy namin. Luckily, madami kami agad naging friends and nag-enjoy na kami maglaro."

The sisters play during weekends and enroll in the camp in the summer, playing everyday that the administrators asked them to start teaching.

The sisters then joined the first badminton tournament organized by JVC. They won their first game but lost against their aunt.

But they got better, even helping DLSU to win the UAAP women's badminton title in 2002.

Paula said it helped that she and her sister were always together.

Teamwork

"May advantage kami kasi nakakapag-practice kami every day," she said. "Kahit papaano may teamwork kami. Kaya namin makiramdam sa isa't-isa. Alam na namin kung saan kami pupunta."

How can people tell who's who when they are on the court? "Mapapansin sa way ng paglalaro namin," Paula said. "Kung sino iyong palaging nasa harapan, ako na iyon. More on strategy kasi ako. Si Therine naman, more of a powerplayer."

And who's better? Therine said there was no comparison. "Magaling si Paula mag-set up tapos ako ang taga-smash. Aside from that, magaling din siya sa drop shots, cross-courts, at sa pag-push ng bola."

Paula said communication was important in any team sport. "Minsan humihina kami kapag hindi kami nagkakasundo ni Therine," she said. "Even during a game, tahimik lang kami, hindi kami mag-umikan. So it's important that you communicate with your partner."

The sisters said passion was what fueled people to excel in any field.

"Kasi kahit sabihin na natin na mahirap kang turuan o matututo, kung passionate ka, gagawa ka ng paraan," said Paula.

"Iyon ang magpu-push sa iyo na t-prove ang sarili mo," Therine added.

After college, Paula, a Legal Management major, and Therine, who's taking up Advertising Management, said they want to start their own businesses.

HARD to believe this pretty woman screams when the house is dirty.

Beautiful, talented, 'obsessive-compulsive'

By Bayani S. San Diego Jr.
Contributor"I'M OBSESSIVE-COMPULSIVE!"
Dawn Zulueta feigns horror.

A longtime friend, photographer Raymond Isaac, agrees. "She has always been organized, but after getting married and moving to Davao, she became OC. She says life in Davao is so laid-back, she has to constantly find things to do."

Dawn owns up. "It's so easy to get bored there. That's why I keep myself busy."

The semi-retired actress, a certified busybody, is not complaining. Running her household like a tight ship, she might be called a domestic diva.

Anton Lagdameo, her husband of seven years, is perplexed, to put it mildly. "Actually," Dawn laughs, "he's afraid I'm bordering on crazy. That's because I even arrange the CDs in alphabetical order!"

Amateur designer

She has always been a stickler for order, that's for sure. "I am such a neat freak," she says, "when it comes to my schedules ... even my things, my shoes. I cannot stand dust. It can get so embarrassing. You'll hear me scream if the house is not clean."

The furniture and décor in the house are constantly being moved around. It must be the amateur interior designer in her. "So I hired houseboys instead of housemaids," she says. "Houseboys are stronger, quicker. They're not sluggish."

Marketing chores she usually leaves in the hands of her trusted driver, although when she has to, she doesn't mind doing it herself.

She explains: "One great thing about living in Davao—everything's fresh!

Fruits, vegetables, seafood ... and since there is no traffic, you can buy all the ingredients that you need on the day itself. I don't like storing food in the freezer for too long."

Dawn Zulueta admits she's a neat freak who arranges even the CDs alphabetically

Advocacy work

Outside of her squeaky-clean home, Dawn occupies herself with advocacy work to help such groups as Violence Against Women, Bataianan Crisis Center, and Davao Beautiful Foundation.

"These are the causes I believe in," she says. "My Tita Margie Moran-Florendo [married to Anton's uncle] invited me to join DBF."

She is planning to become more active in other groups like Bantay Bata and Habitat. On top of this, she has found time to write for a glossy magazine about events in Davao. She also participates in the province's annual holiday bazaars, hawkling everything, from home-baked cookies to aromatherapy soap and beaded Christmas trees.

Volunteer work keeps her "grounded," she admits. "It makes me realize how blessed I am. Yes, I give of myself, but I'm the one who gets more out of every encounter. I am reminded to stop complaining about petty things because some people are just coping and surviving and they have bigger, more serious problems. Sometimes all it takes to make them smile is for me to pose for a snapshot with them, or to chat with them—just a little of my time."

Go-signal

But show biz calls again and again. There have been offers to do another movie after her comeback project, "Filipinas." And recently, she accepted a role in the GMA-7 teleserye "Forever in My Heart," forming a love triangle with Richard Gomez and Regine Velasquez. She is also hosting "ABCinema" on ABC-5, which showcases award-winning Asian films.

She knows exactly when to do whatever it is she sets her heart on: When the right project, for the right reason, comes along. "I wish we could develop shows and movies that remind us of our roots, our history, our values, our strengths as a people," she says.

She is appalled at the sensational goings-on in local Showtown. "Things are really different now," she sighs. "I'm so not used to it. I get shocked. Everything is in-your-face. All the scandals, all the family feuds we see on TV. I can't stand it. Whenever I come across something like that on television, I switch channels or just watch cable."

Maybe a sitcom

Needless to say, Dawn is not about to jeopardize her life of serenity just to get work, even if the lure of the spotlight is proving to be irresistible. "I feel that I still have a lot of creativity waiting to be expressed," she says. She even wants to try singing; she has an entire cabaret act in mind.

She's even eager to try comedy, for a change. "I'd love to do a sitcom like 'Will & Grace,'" she says excitedly. "Take that character Grace. She is so whole, multi-dimensional. You see her quirks, her idiosyncracies, her nuances. And still you love her."

The same might be said of Dawn—OC, quirky, intractable, complex. And still she is loved.

Nanette Inventor's not-so-impossible mission

TEN years of staying power in the entertainment industry is already a milestone. But 21 years?

Nanette Inventor, still "Doña Bading" to many, is easily recognizable by any Filipino who spots her anywhere. And why wouldn't she be, when, for the past two decades (at least 12 years with Manila Genesis Entertainment), this intelligent, funny and musical genius has brought life, love and laughter to her countrymen via TV, films, concerts and corporate shows?

A teacher

Unknown to many, Nanette is also a teacher, and comes from a long line of educators. Her late grandfather was a Sunday school teacher, an aunt is still the Dean of Mary Johnston's College, her mom was a teacher, her sister was a teacher of Asian Studies at the University of the Philippines, and some of her nieces are also teachers.

"Not to say that I am educated," she laughs. "But honestly, if I were not an entertainer, I would continue the teaching legacy. Being both a teacher and an entertainer, I am the one that gets the learnings really. I love traveling and my work not only allows me to learn new culture and widen my horizon; it also keeps me on track with my set mission in life."

She has done almost everything a Filipino entertainer can do, including her favorite engagement, performing for overseas workers

On the global side of show biz, Nanette is one of the few artists in the country constantly sought after to do shows abroad. Nowadays she's seen as semi-regular on the GMA-7's "Joyride" as "Starstruck" survivor Rainer's lovable Iola, and reprising her "Tita Munding" character in "HBO, Hanap Bubay Overseas" on Saturdays. The latter fits her sentiments to a T.

Secret of success

A well-traveled, well-rounded individual (no pun intended), Nanette says it's always been part of her "mission" to be "a channel of entertainment for Overseas Filipino Workers."

When asked what she attributes her success to, she readily replies, "Love and passion for my craft. (Plus) I've been blessed simply because I know I owe everything and leave everything up to God."

Nanette just wound up a concert tour of Amsterdam, Switzerland, London, Rome, and Vienna, with Geneva Cruz and the Apo Hiking Society. Plans are afoot for a second leg of the concert, in the US and Canada.

What more could Nanette ask for? Well, maybe a concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra. Nanette understands why people tend to see her only as a "funny lady who can sing." But she truly hopes to be recognized, too, as a singer who just happens to be "seriously funny."

A.K.A. Dona Bading: "I'm a teacher, too, you know."

This Neverland is not a winner

LOS ANGELES—Police and investigators probing child molestation charges against superstar Michael Jackson on Friday launched a fresh search on his famed Neverland Ranch, detectives said.

The reason for the latest search warrant was not immediately clear. An initial swoop on the sprawling estate in California took place just over a year ago and resulted in Jackson's arrest.

The "King of Pop" was not present at the ranch, named after the home of the eternally youthful children's literary character Peter Pan, when police swooped, Jackson's entourage told AFP.

The raid is one of a number of searches that have been carried out on various locations linked to Jackson since he was arrested on Nov. 20 last year.

Jackson turned himself in two days after the initial Nov. 18, 2003 swoop on his rural estate and was later charged with having molested a 12-year-old boy at Neverland in February and March of last year.

Jackson has pleaded not guilty to a 10-count indictment that accused him child abuse, plying the boy with alcohol to seduce him and with counts of conspiring to kidnap and illegally imprison the youth and his family.

Jury selection in the celebrity trial was due to begin in Santa Maria, south of Neverland, on Jan. 31. The star remains free on three million dollars bail. AFP

Free beer would have done it

By Oliver M. Pulumbait
Contributor

WHEN "Mr. Acoustic" Paolo Santos started his singing career, fame and fortune were the farthest things from his mind. No, he had a most uncommon motivation for performing back then: free beer. The 29-year-old never had any formal music training. A former yuppie, he left the corporate world happily when he felt he was connecting with people with his brand of music.

"I was drinking with my barkada from the office," relates the lanky musician. "One of them said, 'Marunong ka palang kumanta (So you know how to sing)! I have a friend who owns a bar. If you play there, we can get free drinks!'"

The singer-songwriter claims he is just a regular person who loves performing. Paolo was one of last year's most recognized guitar-wielding troubadours who made a mark in the music industry. Yet the show biz aspect of the job unsettles him still.

Hates makeup

"I have not gotten used to pictorials. I hate the makeup. I just like playing live—it's absolutely one of the best things on earth for me."

Paolo's covers of Stevie Wonder's

Paolo Santos

never expected fame and fortune when he started singing

"Overjoyed" and PM's "Moonlight Over Paris" have resounded nicely with new listeners. He has actually gotten feedback from an original artist he borrowed a tune from: "I did 'Sunlight' by folk artist Michael Tomlinson. He e-mailed me and congratulated me, saying he was really flattered. I just assured him that all the royalties would be paid."

But he feels that doing his own renditions of previously released songs definitely has its limits. "Rap is out of the question," he says, smiling.

His love for music began when he was a boy, as his father's affinity for audible gems rubbed off on him. "Dad ko kasi maraming vinyl records sa bahay (My dad has a lot of vinyl records at home). He encouraged me to listen to the Beatles and James Taylor. I loved it, and got used to listening to really old music," he says.

Economics degree

Before the stage beckoned, Paolo recounts, he was going in an entirely different direction. "I have an Economics degree from De La Salle University. I wanted to work for the United Nations. I went to Geneva for further studies. I was 22 back then."

The lure of music proved too strong to resist. Fortunately it resulted in acclaim and commercial success.

His second album, released last month, contains all-original material. This allowed him to fully exercise his creative muscles, he says happily.

In only over a year, he has learned one significant truth about the music business. "There's always compromise, whether you like it or not. There's a need to satisfy your audience; that's the whole point. But there's a need to satisfy yourself, too, and the record producers. How an artist balances these determines his survival in the industry. Now, at least, record companies trust artists, and don't dictate too much."

Paolo admits that having a wide range of listeners makes him extremely grateful, and, well, overjoyed. Sometimes it's daunting, he says, considering that onstage, his words can be highly influential. "I'm sharing a big chunk of myself with kids, sometimes people in their 50s. Kuya naman nilang lahat (But they all get it)."

Striking while the iron is hot

By Remy Umerez

ANGEL Locsin is one busy girl.

She appears in movies and on television, endorses beauty-care products, and does out-of-town shows which are plenty during the Christmas season.

But she is only 19. Why is she working so hard?

"Just striking while the iron is hot," Angel says, smiling. "I have bills to pay. I recently bought a condo unit and a brand-new car. The condo is my sanctuary. The car is a necessity, and I hope I can soon drive it myself. I have a driver and a maid. But I enjoy what I'm doing, so it's okay."

She tapes "Mulawin" three times a week. Her closeness with teen actor Richard Gutierrez has delighted many fans who consider them the love team to beat.

Friends, lovers

"They say we have chemistry," Angel muses. "Beyond that, I cannot tell. He is a dear friend, caring and solicitous. We can read each other's mind. But love? My main priority is my career. But the fans like Richard very much. I like him a lot, too, because he is a gentleman."

From the winged characters they play in "Mulawin," Richard and Angel are now cast on the big screen as lovers in the horror thriller, "Sigaw."

"I play his extremely jealous girlfriend," Angel says. "Iza Calzado asks for Richard's help in the movie, and I go mad. I fight with him all the time, until eerie things start happening to me. I was drawn to the movie because I know that director Yam Laranas is good. I saw the movie he directed with Richard Gomez and Regine Velasquez."

Christmas wish

Angel is about to shoot another movie, "Let The Love Begin," which marks the return of GMA 7 to movie production. This one has a Valentine 2005 play date, and to ensure double bankability, it also has the love team of Mark Herras and Jennylyn Mercado, according to Wilma Galvante, senior vice president for entertainment.

ANGEL Locsin

Sleep—lots and lots of it—is Angel's wish for this Christmas. Also, she wants to be able to enroll next year in a course on Criminology. She explains: "I watched 'Ms. Congeniality' and fell in love with the role played by Sandra Bullock, a female FBI agent disguised as a beauty candidate."

"Sigaw" is Angel's fourth movie and her first horror picture. She appeared previously in "Mano Po 2," "Kuya," and "Singles." She started out earlier as a model, then joined the cast of "Click," GMA's youth-oriented show.

Poll shames solons on pork

54 percent of Pinoys want fund reduced

CONTRARY to the claims of members of the House of Representatives, most Filipinos are against the graft-ridden pork barrel, results of a survey conducted by a private polling firm showed.

Pulse Asia Inc. said yesterday that 84 percent of Filipinos were in favor of either cutting or abolishing the pork barrel, officially called the Priority Development Assistance Fund (PDAF).

"Fifty-four percent say the pork barrel funds should be merely reduced and not totally eliminated, while 30 percent think that pork barrel should be removed," Pulse Asia research fellow Emmanuel de Dios said in a statement. Only 16 percent favored retaining the pork at its current level.

De Dios noted that opposition to the pork barrel was most pronounced in Metro Manila, where 46 percent called for its elimination.

The survey—which covered 1,200 respondents nationwide—was conducted from Oct. 22 to Nov. 6.

"The majority call for merely reducing rather than totally eliminating the pork barrel appears to be a pragmatic compromise that takes into account two opinions: on the one hand, there is prevalent opinion that a good deal of legislators' projects go to corruption, but on the other hand, there is a still widespread belief that it is a legislator's duty to deliver projects and programs to his constituents," said De Dios.

Gov't now allows logging in privately owned lands

By Volk Contreras

THREE days after Malacañang suspended all logging activities following the killer floods and landslides in Luzon, the Department of Environment and Natural Resources yesterday announced that the mass cutting and transport of timber in "private plantations" could continue.

What was initially reported as President Macapagal-Arroyo's suspension of all logging activities was, in effect, relaxed, freeing commercial operations in privately owned lands that, according to the DENR, account for around 2 million hectares (or 28 percent) of the Philippines' current forest cover.

The suspension now applies only to logging operations in public forest lands, including areas managed by state-sanctioned logging concessionaires as well as patches abused by illegal loggers.

Environment Secretary Michael Defensor issued this "clarification" in a press conference yesterday following a meeting with Ms Arroyo.

"The President said—and this exactly jibes with our advocacy—that those who plant [trees] in private plantations will be allowed to transport their harvest. But in all the rest [of the areas] all movements should stop," Defensor said, adding:

"I immediately called up the [local DENR offices] concerned and I told them that I'm issuing an order to allow the private plantations to harvest and cut."

But regional and provincial forestry officials are also required to check whether the intended timber harvests are actually within private plantations before they issue permits to cut or transport, Defensor said.

Asked why, after issuing a blanket suspension order, Mala-

DSWD clean out of funds for relief operations

By Dona Pazzibugan

PEOPLE like Severina Espedero of General Nakar must have been on the mind of Corazon "Dinky" Soliman when the social welfare secretary told the Senate she was running out of funds and needed up to P70 million more to sustain relief operations.

Soliman said that to continue services to the tens of thousands still homeless or displaced, her department needed "between 50 to 70 million pesos for relief operations."

However, Senate finance committee chair Manuel Villar said that Congress was helpless to allocate additional money at this time and recommended Soliman get the money from the special presidential discretionary fund.

Which would be of big help to typhoon victims like Espedero who had nothing left but the clothes she was wearing.

Her home and everything she owned was buried under a sea of mud in General Nakar, one of the towns in Quezon province devastated.

11TH-HOUR JOURNEY Community-based forest management last option

By Sylvia L. Mayuga
Contributor

(Last of two parts)

MOST Filipinos have never seen, loved or lived in a forest. Strange, when from it come water, oxygen, medicine, timber and food. It buffers human habitations from typhoons and protects them from floods, meanwhile providing a sense of well-being only God's breath in Nature can give. After close to four centuries as a colony and decades of exchanging a young republic's life sources for the pittance of cash, a merciless deadline is upon us.

First to snuff this deadline in the wind were scientists, artists, visionaries and the young. Since that historic awakening in the '70s, mountaineering, spelunking, diving, kayaking and bird-watching have grown apace with the environmental movement. Their costs are prohibitive for the general run of Filipinos, but from those who can pursue them have emerged passionate conservationists worth their weight in gold.

Government has been largely a clueless parent before this youthful surge, another hard reality named in the conference. Besides eminent corruption, our Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) has been formally trained for exploitation, not conservation, of

Filipino among 9 dead in Jeddah terror attack

By TJ Burgonilo
and Christine O. Avendaño

ROMEO de la Rosa, 44, from Tondo, had been working at the US consulate in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, for 12 years.

On Monday, he took a bullet in the head, the ninth Filipino to die in the Middle East since American troops invaded Iraq last year.

Described by a Philippine official as an "all-around maintenance man" at the consulate, De la Rosa was among 9 people killed when militants, lobbing explosives and claiming to have links to the al-Qaida network, stormed the heavily guarded US diplomatic mission, triggering a gun battle with Saudi security forces.

The Saudi wing of al-Qaida claimed responsibility for the brazen attack that showed it still posed a threat to the world's top oil exporter.

The attack was the first against a Western diplomatic mission in Saudi Arabia and first major strike in six months by militants bent on overthrowing the ruling family and driving Westerners from the birthplace of Islam.

The circumstances of De la Rosa's death were unclear but some of the consulate staff wounded in the broad daylight attack told Reuters that the militants had tried to use them as human shields.

"We have identified his body. We just came from the morgue 20 minutes ago," Philippine Ambassador Balnarin Guinon said on radio yesterday.

New Nida witness a 'breakthrough'

By Philip C. Tuleza

A POSSIBLE new witness in the brutal murder of Nida Blanca saw the actress' husband Rod Lawrence Strunk put the "unconscious" Blanca inside her car, Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said yesterday.

Gonzalez said in a press conference that the possible witness claimed she saw Strunk and another person transfer Blanca from a van into her car, a Nissan Sentra, before she was found dead in the vehicle.

"This could really be a breakthrough. If what she is saying is true, she will be a strong witness," the justice secretary said yesterday.

He added that the witness was expected to appear before the Department of Justice later this week or early next week.

"I want to talk to her personally... I will cross-examine her to test her credibility," Gonzalez said.

He added that the witness was new and he would have to talk to her first before turning her over to the police and the National Bureau of Investigation.

He said a "go-between" came to his office and informed him about a woman who was willing to testify. However, the witness was confined in the hospital, thus postponing her trip to the DOJ.

Gonzalez earlier admitted that government evidence in the murder case was only circumstantial and that this would further delay the filing of a second extradition petition against Strunk, the principal accused who has fled to the United States.

Blanca (Dorothy Jones in real life) was found stabbed dead inside her car at the Atlanta Center building in San Juan on Nov. 7, 2001.

The government has charged Strunk and Philip Medel Jr. for Blanca's murder before the Pasig City Regional Court.

Gonzalez said he had ordered prosecutors to review evidence in the case and told them to strengthen it further.

He said that although the government only had circumstantial evidence, it could still get a conviction if the evidence were presented convincingly before the Pasig court.

UNDER which shell is President Macapagal-Arroyo hiding her pork barrel?

At the Senate hearing yesterday on the proposed P2.3-billion budget for the Office of the President for 2005, administration Senators Manuel Villar and Rodolfo Biazon were surprised to learn the outlay did not contain an allocation for the President's intelligence fund.

Baffled by the glaring omission, Villar, chair of the Senate finance committee, and Biazon, chair of the congressional oversight committee on intelligence funds, demanded answers from Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita.

Villar told Ermita and his senior and deputy secretaries who were at the hearing that the OP's intelligence fund had always been separately funded by Congress "for all to see."

"I cannot locate any information on the intel funds," Biazon said. Ermita himself was taken aback by Biazon's statement.

After making some queries of his staff, he then admitted that about P665 million had been earmarked for the President's intelligence fund, but this was included under Maintenance and Other Operating Expenses, or MOOE, in the OP budget, specifically under "confidential, intelligence, extra and miscellaneous expenses."

Ermita said the categorization was done by the Department of Budget and Management.

Biazon reminded Ermita the usual practice was to treat the intelligence fund as separate and distinct in the national budget. He said the process of liquidating MOOEs was different from that for intelligence funds and miscellaneous expenses.

"I have been fighting for [so] long to increase the intel funds of the AFP (Armed Forces of the Philippines) and the PNP (Philippine National Police) because they are at the forefront of security for the country. I raise a question why the military, the whole AFP will only have P72 million in intel funds and the PNP only a little over P100 million, and here we have the OP [with] P665 million?" Biazon said.

But Ermita justified the amount by saying that about P500 million would be used for the operations of the Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Commission and only P150 million would be retained by the OP.

He said the President, being the commander-in-chief of the Armed Forces, could allocate portions of her intelligence fund to agencies concerned.

But Biazon stressed that agencies charged with securing the country "must have a free hand" in accessing the budget.

Biazon then told Ermita that, as he had done during the Estrada administration—which was given P500 million in intelligence funds—he would suggest in plenary amending the OP's budget proposal, "meaning give the security agencies the funds that (they) need."

The senator estimated that the total confidential, intelligence, extraordinary and miscellaneous expenses of the OP could even reach P772 million. He did not elaborate, however.

At this point, Villar suggested Ermita just ask the DBM to redo the proposal.

Ermita agreed but said that having the intelligence fund under the MOOE would give the President "flexibility."

"After all, as we always say, the commander-in-chief is responsible for the accomplishment of the mission that she had set for herself, including that of the armed services, and it is spelled out that the President, when there are problems that arise, will have to reallocate what is in the OP budget for intelligence," Ermita said.

"But we will ask the DBM to take a look at the senator's suggestion... to restudy the figures and see how we can reallocate some amounts, especially to the Armed Forces now that we are tasked to fight terrorism," he said.

Aside from the intelligence fund, the Office of the President has other discretionary funds—the social fund, calamity fund and other contingency funds tucked into the budgets of the departments and agencies concerned.

In a sense, Villar said, these were pork barrel allocations because they were hardly subject to audit, and could be disbursed at will by the President "as the situation arises."

In contrast, the hearing on the proposed P84-million budget for the office of Vice President Noli de Castro only took about 10 minutes.

CONSUMER & OIL PRICE WATCH

Private Sector

A Message to Our Consumers - Part 3 Thank you for your support & understanding

We thank you for understanding our support for increases in the prices of basic services to reflect their true cost. And our stand to have new revenue measures to prevent a fiscal crisis and, thus, prevent a situation like Argentina's.

The pain is ours too - to see consumers bear the additional increases at a time when they can hardly make both ends meet.

ON THE ISSUE OF PRICES OF BASIC COMMODITIES

- We thank the President for assigning Vice President Noli de Castro to lead the campaign to keep prices of basic commodities at reasonable levels during the Christmas holidays when prices normally rise, even without the aggravating effect of the recent series of typhoons.
- It is refreshing to see a ranking public official take a hands-on look at price increases and see what can be done to make them reasonable and for this purpose communicate to the public the steps taken by the government and the private sector in the National Price Coordinating Council.

ON THE ISSUE OF COMPUTING OIL PRICES

- There definitely will be a rollback in the prices of gasoline and possibly diesel, as world crude prices have dropped in November compared to October by $2.67 for Dubai crude, by $2.28 for MOPS gasoline and by $1.70 for diesel.
- Since diesel is subsidized by gasoline pricing, we will have to determine first the final under-recovery of diesel.
- The COPW is meeting with the Senior Officials of Petron, Shell, Caltex, Total and the New Players to reconcile once and for all the disparities in the manner oil price increases/decreases are computed as well as the under and over recoveries in oil prices from January to November 2004.
- OVERALL, THE GOOD NEWS IS THAT OIL PRICES MAY GO DOWN DURING DECEMBER TO MARCH 2005 since demand for heating oil will be lower than earlier feared because of an expected mild winter in the US and Europe as reflected in a one-day steep drop of Dubai crude by $2.65 amid panic-selling by brokers.

We commit to the public and the consumers to demand full transparency in all existing government contracts and projects to prevent a repetition of the sins of the past.

ON THE ISSUE OF NAPOCOR

- Napocor required a power rate increase of P1.87 per kilowatt hour (kwh) to attain a return on rate base of 8%. However, the Energy Regulatory Commission (ERC) granted 98 centavos, leaving a balance of 89 centavos.
- This resulted in a loss of P8 billion from October to December 2004. Please note, however, that the longer the remaining rate increase is delayed, the more consumers will have to pay later on.
- The COPW spoke with ERC Chairman Rodolfo Albano on Napocor's second rate increase. He told us he will hold a final public hearing on December 16th after which ERC will decide on the merits of the Napocor rate increase.

EXPECTED BENEFITS FOR CONSUMERS

- Napocor's US $200-B debt, including interest, will be shouldered by the government. Therefore, the debt and interest will NO longer be included in Napocor's rate increase petition. Nor will it be reflected in our electricity bills.
- The COPW will determine from PSALM the expected profits from the sale of Napocor's power generating plants and the yearly income from the sale of the National Transmission Corporation (TRANSCO) to the private sector.
- We need to get this information for us to find out just when Napocor's debts would be fully paid and when PSALM, a government agency, would distribute the profits to the public in terms of lower electricity rates to consumers.

As we celebrate Christmas and welcome the New Year, let's be optimistic, though cautiously, that things will turn out for the better. However, it is always best to prepare for the worst.

'My term's extended and there's nothing you can do about it'

By Christian V. Esguerra

"MY TERM'S already extended and you can't do anything about it anymore."

This was Philippine National Police Director General Edgar Aglipay's response to top police officials' resolution condemning the practice of extending the term of service of retiring officers.

In the first place, the criticism did not cover the position of the PNP chief, Aglipay, a top beneficiary of the controversial practice, argued.

"When it comes to the choice of the PNP chief, it's solely the prerogative of the President," he told the Inquirer in a telephone interview.

The position made public by the Association of Chiefs of Police of the Philippines Inc. (ACPI) last Monday covered other PNP positions whose officials were sometimes given a term extension by the National Police Commission.

To appease officials grumbling over his term extension, Aglipay said he was ready to go after March 13, the end of the six-month tenure given to him by President Arroyo.

"I'm very thankful [of] the opportunity given to me by the President," he said. "That's why I have to do my best, to use every hour of my term. That's why I work 20 hours a day, and wear the uniform even on Sundays."

The assurance was also apparently meant to appease officials itching to get his post.

Aglipay's term extension virtually dashed the hopes of Deputy Director General Virgilio Gil who will reach his mandatory retirement age of 56 on March 14, a day after Aglipay is expected to step down.

If chosen, Deputy Director General Reynaldo Velasco, the PNP's third in command, would have at least two months to serve. But that's if he gets appointed by the President.

Aglipay, Velasco and Gil all belong to the controversial Philippine Military Academy Class 1971. It also includes Sen. Panfilo Lacson, perennial coup plotter Gregorio Honasan, and Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia who is facing parallel civilian and military investigations for his unexplained wealth estimated at at least P143 million.

MASINLOC BIDDING

Solon questions power plant sale to RP-Aussie group

By GW C. Cabacungan Jr.

AN ADMINISTRATION lawmaker yesterday expressed grave doubts on the financial capability of a little-known Filipino-Australian consortium to make good its $561-million bid for the Masinloc coal power plant which President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo has touted as a "landmark accomplishment."

Albay Rep. Joey Salceda said that, since financial capability was the sole prequalification for the bidding, he was surprised how a Filipino corporation with a paid-up capitalization of P600,000 (YNN Corp. owned by Sunny Sun) and its Australian partner with a market capitalization of only $30 million (Green Pacific Energy Ltd.) was allowed to bid for one of the government's most prized power plants.

Financial muscle

But Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM) chief executive officer Raphael Lotilla told the Inquirer that the government was confident that the YNN consortium had the financial muscle to carry out the deal. Lotilla claimed that the critics wanted the bidding to fail so that the government could put Masinloc on the auction block anew.

Salceda said he was dismayed that the government did not properly screen the bidders for Masinloc which only attracted two bidders as the top guns in the industry, led by Mirant Corp. and Korea Electric Power Corp., pulled out at the last minute.

He said the government might have felt the need to rush the bidding to make a good pitch to credit rating agencies that have warned the Philippines of a credit downgrade due to its lack of credibility in solving the fiscal crisis.

Salceda claimed that immediately after YNN-Green Pacific had won the bidding for the 600-megawatt coal power plant in Zambales last week, the consortium peddled the deal to other power companies and banks to come up with its bid that was more than what the government had anticipated.

"The Masinloc sale could turn out to be another 'embarrassing fiasco' if we are not careful. There appears to be serious lapses in procedural and substantial requirements. It's a bad oversight," Salceda said.

He said he would recommend to the President to put the project on a watch list and take remedial action to "save us from further loss of credibility."

But the government, however, quickly doused emerging doubts about the winning bidder's financial capacity. Based on documents furnished by the Australian company's investment banker, Credit Suisse First Boston, Lotilla said Green Pacific's parent, Great Pacific, had a controlling interest in the 24-megawatt Tabang Huangqiao coal-fired plant in China and mining interests in Australia.

Lotilla said the company's founder, Alfred Wong, held executive management positions in leading financial institutions and banks in Australia, such as the Capital Financial Group and State Bank NSW.

$9 million

Lotilla said that if the YNN consortium fails to come up with the money, the government would still gain $9 million from the standby letter of credit that all bidders were required to submit before the bidding.

"The bidders were asked to risk something even before they made a bid," he said.

Lotilla said the government had to wait for the consent of the multilateral creditors of National Power Corp. such as the World Bank and Asian Development Bank before taking the first payment from the YNN consortium (40 percent down payment and the balance payable in two years).

"We're putting pressure on multilaterals to proceed with privatization. We told them we did this without any help," he said.

Community-based forest management last option

primary wealth. Over the past two decades, to the tune of multimillions in grant funds and soft loans, bureaucrats have signed up and made money with undeserving and downright crooked partners in community-based reforestation.

Lack of monitoring

Lack of monitoring multiplied losses—bad enough when grantees were making a quick buck with officials, worse when earnest project holders were ignored. Now the "DENR can no longer ignore problems and wish they would go away; community-based forest management is the last remaining option," warned Code-NGO.

A major conference call was for a massive cleanup and reorientation of the DENR, requiring as close an examination of its record as the ongoing military shake-up. Too long has local government been a rubber stamp for reforestation projects dominated by Manila. Crisis compels the integration of forest protection with comprehensive land use plans, local knowledge and grass-roots "coalitions of the willing" right now.

'Rainforestation'

Putting his finger on a glaring fact in years of failure and wasted funds, La Salle professor Francisco Magno pointed a way out—local communities and LGUs tightly linked with centers of learning. "We don't need much money to protect the forest," he said. Partnership is more vital.

This could guard against perpetuating a major mistake as reforestation funds poured in the '80s and '90s—massive and ill-researched planting of fast-growing non-native trees. One of them, the gmelina, proceeded to "colonize" hundreds of hectares while vulnerable to local pests and diseases that could wipe out entire reforested areas. In Kaluga, farmers who planted gmelina saw their crops dying close to the exotic trees that made the soil acidic in the name of reforestation.

From that major error emerged a new theory in Leyte, a province traumatized by the Ormoc killer flood of 1991, with 18 percent of its forest cover left by its own logging elite and thousands of needy farmers. Dr. Patricia Milan of the Leyte State University put her doctorate in biology, vertebrate ecology and pest management to work. She would imitate the evolution of the original closed-canopy, high-diversity Philippine rainforest and its 3,000 known species.

New beginnings

On idle land, she planted fast-growing local "pioneer" trees like bandang and anadyong. Then she planted apitong, lauan and yakal—hardwoods to protect the pioneers and root crops planted in their gaps. Finally she planted durian, santol, mangosteen and marang. The root crops and modest income from the fruit trees could sustain farmers waiting for larger gains from a hardwood farm. Soon, "rainforestation" was born with endemic seeds and German funding. Antique, Bukidnon, Mindoro and Surigao are now adopting this "new" method reminiscent of wise Hanunoo Mangyan agriculture.

The success stories were all strikingly set in motion by crisis. Another one is set in regal Mt. Matutum, watershed of the old Maguindanao sultanate (present day South Cotabato, Sultan Kudarat and General Santos) and headwaters of five rivers flowing out to Sarangani Bay. In the late '80s, 7,000 denuded hectares of Mt. Matutum drowned a foreign consultant working at the Dole Plantation in a flash flood that swept his vehicle off a bridge as it rushed through assembly line pineapple fields.

To showcase an "economic growth area" in the Fidel Ramos years, NGOs, local stakeholders business and government agencies began to craft a thorough conservation plan. A decade later, in-migration and timber poaching in Mt. Matutum have dropped dramatically. Fewer flash floods were followed by triumph in the past three flood-free years. "We don't need multi-millions in new infrastructure, only real tree planting," observed Daisy Fuentes, feisty governor of South Cotabato.

Community consultation

Closing gaps between research and experience, government and governed, was the common thread of new beginnings. Nueva Vizcaya, for instance, took a quantum leap with popular consultations under a sympathetic governor. These revealed how "the autocratic nature of governance exacerbates forest management problems." Change began in a new LGU campaign for the trust of upland consultants. Today, a people inspired by the weighty role of "stewardship" and a new designation as "managers" of the forest have earned a fighting chance for Nueva Vizcaya's own badly denuded watershed.

Community consultation also turned the key for the Maeng tribe in Tubo, Abra. Caught between the need to exploit their forests and tribal culture's strict rules for conservation, community spirit found a difficult middle ground—strict priorities. Everyone agreed: rehabilitation of the watershed comes first; other resources can be exploited, but only on condition of automatic replenishment.

More hopeful experiences counterweighing the 11th hour will be available in the Haribon website early next year but now it was time to leave lessons in air-conditioned rooms for sermons in the wild.

Sermons in the wild

Driving through Subic Freeport, we silently thanked the Americans for returning this watershed to us largely intact. Wealthy weekend homes, hotel clusters, a first-rate road network and well-kept port facilities in today's Subic Bay Freeport became mere sociological notes in its fresh winds and subtle fragrances.

Here, undisturbed lowland dipterocarp and limestone forests descend to rich mangrove swamps and beach forests fringing Subic Bay. To the credit of Filipino leadership, a scientific inventory of the post naval base has identified its 745 plant species (four rare, seven threatened), 83 bird species (almost 15 percent of the national total), 16 mangrove species, 201 fish species, 122 animal species (12 rare, 25 endangered), and 16 species of mammals.

The Philippine Giant Fruit Bat is one mammal celebrated as a hero in Haribon's new Subic "Gubat Learning Center." Also called "flying fox" for its large eyes, ears and snout, it's the only mammal capable of sustained flight—the world's largest known flying fox whose wingspan can stretch to two meters. The downside: it has a bad rep among orchard keepers and gardeners as an "incredible glutton" with a keen smell unerringly leading to ripening fruit as far as a hundred meters away. It's also blind as, well—a bat, constantly screeching as it navigates by echolocation, its own sound bouncing back from objects in its path.

Flying glutton

First sermon in the wild you shoot bats; you kill the forest; you kill yourself.

This noisy, flying glutton is actually God's own forer, pollinating plants and trees farther and wider than most, dropping seeds in its fertilizing dung. The Apalain Trails, a 3-kilometer trek from 100-meter elevations down to the sea, is proof of divine design. Alternating with soaring hardwoods are healthy green bamboo in artfully spaced clumps where bats defecating in flight once dropped them.

They're flying home to the forest as sunset approaches over the Triboa Mangrove Park. As the screeching fades, such stillness descends that you can almost hear this little-understood hardwood growing where Subic's inland waters flow out and mix with the salty bay. The silence is deceptive. Hidden fish and crustaceans furiously spawning in hidden root crevices and shallow mudflats are suddenly revealed by a thousand ripples in the mudflat, as air in their tiny burrows is displaced by waves.

Silence of the wild

Second sermon in the wild: silence is a powerful medium of life.

This silence is reflected in the eyes of the hunter-gatherer Ayta tribe to whom Subic is ancestral domain. What good fortune that the naval base command thought better than to displace them, hiring them instead to track intruders in vast grounds. They were given generous compensation with a fringe benefit—the exclusive right to scavenge saleable US scrap. This drove in a unique relationship, giving this diminutive aboriginal people a taste for First World hi-tech and the label "Amerayta."

Making history

This is fading from memory now in the new niches opened for the Ayta in changing times. In the early free port days, Dick Gordon contracted them as jungle tour guides, the beginning of today's thriving eco-tourism industry in Subic. At the tail end of the Felicitio Payumo years last March, the Ayta made history as the first tribe to receive a Certificate of Ancestral Domain Title.

This time, a GPS survey assisted by the intrepid NGO PAFID complemented tribal measure of home—abat-nanaw at abat-alala (as far as the eye can see and memory recall). The result: 4,355 hectares of original Ayta hunting grounds in upland forest down to the sea.

On the same day their title was awarded, this gentle tribe was also contracted to reforest 138 hectares at the Subic reserve border in Hermosa, Bataan, logged in the '60s allegedly by well-connected parties, before base security was tightened in the Vietnam War years. The area is now part of a buffer zone designated in a Protected Area Management Plan, a signal achievement of the Payumo years.

Best model

Don't look now but if Ayta luck fully harnesses ancestral memory of harmony with Nature, it may just come up with the best model for healing yet—another sermon in the wild to arrest a frightening 11th hour.

'Defective' PMA topnotcher not useless, may be 'repaired'

Or at least that's what Lt. Gen. Genaro Senga, chief of the Philippine Army, thinks of 2nd Lt. Rolly Joaquin, valedictorian of the PMA's 2004 graduating class.

Senga said that "considering his potentials," Joaquin, 21, was "not totally doomed" and could still be "rehabilitated."

Lt. Gen. Crisobito Balaoing, PMA superintendent, holds a similar view: Like a product still covered by a warranty, Joaquin can be "returned" to the PMA for "repair."

"If a product is defective, then you improve the factory," Balaoing said. "But if 90 percent of the products are defective, then we close the factory."

But what to do with Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia, a 1971 PMA graduate and former military comptroller under trial in civilian and military courts for amassing P143 million in unexplained wealth?

"If a product conks out 10 years (later), it's not a factory defect anymore," Balaoing said, suggesting that the country's premier military academy should not be blamed for the errant behavior of its graduates.

But Joaquin will have to face the consequences of trying to make off with a CD with a switched price tag at a commissary in Fort Benang, Georgia, Senga said.

System failure

He said that depending on the decision of the Armed Forces' Efficiency and Separations Board, Joaquin could be demoted or dismissed from the service.

"What happened to Joaquin is an indicator that there is a failure in the system," Balaoing admitted.

According to Balaoing, the PMA is finalizing a new program that integrates character development into all aspects of the cadets' four-year stay at the academy.

He said the goal is to produce a well-rounded cadet. "What is the use of having a good student in engineering, in English, in social science, if there is something wrong in his character?"

A report from the Joint United States Military Assistance Group (Jusmag) said Joaquin had removed a $50 discount tag from a CD that was on sale and affixed it to another CD priced at $12.

He was caught in the act by a surveillance camera at a commissary of the US Army Infantry School, where he was a student officer, Army spokesperson Maj. Bartolome Bacarro had said, quoting from the Jusmag report received on Oct. 26.

Joaquin was taking an Infantry Officers Basic Course at Fort Benang, which was part of the Jusmag award given him on his graduation from the PMA in March. He was to have finished the course this month.

The young officer is confined to quarters at Fort Bonifacio, where he was taken upon his return to the country on Oct. 28.

If probable cause is established, he could face a court-martial, Bacarro had said.

Correction

IN THE story "Mercy ship" conks out in high seas off Quezon" (Dec. 7, Page A1), it was not the "mercy ship" Grandstar 2 that conked out but the outrigger boat that was carrying 40 volunteers on their way to Mauban, Quezon, from Real town on Sunday after delivering relief goods to calamity victims. Grandstar 2 had brought the volunteers and relief goods to Real on Saturday morning.

'Iggy' wants Abadia probed on RSBS

NEGROS Occidental Rep. Ignacio "Iggy" Arroyo, a brother of First Gentleman Jose Miguel "Mike" Arroyo, yesterday called for a congressional investigation into the finances of the Armed Forces Retirement Services and Benefits System during the term of former AFP chief Gen. Lisandro Abadia.

Arroyo said the investigation should focus on the alleged increase in the assets of Abadia and how the RSBS incurred losses during his tenure as RSBS chair.

Saying that the RSBS plunged into near-bankruptcy during Abadia's tenure, Arroyo said that if found responsible, the retired general should be brought to justice.

The Ombudsman last week ordered the filing of graft charges against Abadia for allegedly accumulating P11 million in "unexplained wealth" during his term as AFP chief from 1991 to 1993.

Abadia said the charges against him were part of a smear campaign allegedly being orchestrated by the First Gentleman and Interior Secretary Angelo Reyes, himself a former AFP chief.

Arroyo said his brother, the First Gentleman, should not be dragged into the AFP corruption issue.

"Instead of evading the issue and destroying disinterested people like the First Gentleman, General Abadia should first explain the simultaneous increase in his assets and the losses of the RSBS," Arroyo said.

He said the salary of Abadia as AFP chief was not that substantial to merit such an increase in his assets.

And, since the RSBS was part of the AFP, he said the military pension fund should not be spared from the ongoing investigation of corruption in the military establishment.

The RSBS, a pension fund for soldiers, was found to have incurred huge losses because of heavy investments in real estate and other projects.

The Senate blue ribbon committee that investigated the case had recommended the filing of charges against Abadia and other RSBS officials in 2001. But the Office of the Ombudsman cleared them after giving weight to Abadia's defense that the RSBS was a private fund. Cynthia D. Balana

Get to work on RP victim, Cimatu asked

By Cynthia D. Balana

TWO LEADERS of the House of Representatives yesterday asked special envoy to the Middle East Roy Cimatu to immediately coordinate with the Philippine embassy in Saudi Arabia to secure overseas Filipino workers (OFWs) there following the death of a Filipino working in the United States consulate during an attack by Saudi militants.

Cebu Rep. Antonio Cuenco, chair of the House committee on foreign affairs, and Zamboanga del Norte Rep. Roseller Barinaga, chair of the House committee on labor and employment, said there was a need to shore up the embassy's security defenses and draw up security precautions for Filipinos in Saudi Arabia in case of another attack.

Romeo de la Rosa, a telecommunications maintenance worker in the US consulate in Riyadh, was killed the other day when Saudi police traded gunfire with suspects believed to be linked to the al-Qaida movement of Osama bin Laden.

"The death of De la Rosa justifies the need for heightened vigilance for the safety and welfare of our workers," Cuenco said.

Cuenco asked OFWs to take precautionary measures because of Bin Laden's renewed challenge for terrorists to attack the US and its allies, the Philippines included.

Barinaga said the US embassy attack was a stark reminder that OFWs were "extremely vulnerable" and deserved government protection and support.

Prior to the attack, he said, most of the US consulate staff in Jeddah had been evacuated several months ago due to security threats.

"We urge Ambassador Cimatu to work for the safety of our remaining OFWs in the US embassy in Jeddah and to coordinate with the OFW communities in the Middle East and Saudi Arabia for any possible attack by militants," Barinaga said.

cafiang was now making a distinction between logging in private and public lands, he said: "But there are private concessionaires complaining. 'Bakit ganito, pinagtatim kami (After allowing us to plant, why this?)' In fact, they own the [cultivated] land."

'Totally correct'

But the Department of Justice is upholding the legality of Ms. Arroyo's order suspending all logging activities nationwide.

Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said the President was authorized under the Constitution to suspend such activities even if the logging firms had permits from the DENR.

"Private interests must yield to the general welfare of the country," he said. "The President was totally correct."

Gonzalez said he expected loggers, especially those exporting timber, to challenge the legality of Ms. Arroyo's order.

"Does [the order] violate the law? Yes and no," he said. "Yes, it infringes on the contract of the logging firms. But it does not violate the law under the general welfare clause of the Constitution."

Gonzalez also said the President could order the suspension because the state had the police power to ensure the safety of its citizens.

"Salus populi est suprema lex. The welfare of the people is the supreme law," he said, adding that there were enough laws to protect the forests but the problem was imple-

Gov't to use 'satellite imaging technology' vs illegal loggers

By Fe Zamora

FOREST czar Victor Corpus yesterday said that in view of the scarcity of forest rangers, he would use "satellite imaging technology" to do the job.

"The satellite will track down illegal loggers for the police and military to apprehend," he told reporters in Filipino.

But high technology will be used only at the start of the campaign to guard and replant the forests, said Corpus.

"We believe that if we can do it through self-reliance, we will be spending less," he said.

Corpus, a retired general, said his request for an initial P100 million was only "to jump-start the project."

"I'm not even sure if it would be enough," he said.

Corpus is proposing a community-based reforestation program that will allow a family to plant at least 1,000 trees a year in a 10-year cycle. The family gets 70 percent of the proceeds of the sale of the trees after 10 years.

Giving the community "proprietary rights" will give it the responsibility to "guard the trees," Corpus said.

President Macapagal-Arroyo had named Corpus chair of the state-owned Natural Resources Development Corp. and head of the anti-illegal-logging task force.

But Pasig Rep. Robert Jaworski said the appointment was "a big mistake."

"The President and General Corpus are like two opposite poles with their conflicting positions ... This is very confusing because we have a President advocating a total log ban policy and appointing a new adviser who does not seem to share her belief," the neophyte congressman said.

On Monday, Ms. Arroyo endorsed to Congress the immediate passage of a measure imposing a total log ban. But on the same day, Corpus said this could not be possible and proposed that the government continue to adopt a selective log ban.

"I have no question on the integrity and capability of General Corpus but appointing him to a position that is intrinsically in conflict with his view only guarantees that a total log ban policy is doomed to fail," Jaworski said. With a report from Cynthia D. Balana

'Private' hectares

According to Defensor, private plantation owners are authorized to cut trees within their property by virtue of a private land timber permit or PLTP.

Logging concessionaires operating in public lands enter into Integrated Forest Management Agreements (Ifmas) with the government—a latter-day version of the Timber License Agreements (TLAs) during the Marcos regime.

Of the Philippines' current forest cover estimated at 7 million hectares, private plantations account for 2 million hectares, Defensor said, quoting DENR data.

These "private" hectares, along with government reforestation programs covering 500,000 hectares, enabled the Philippine forest cover to expand to its current scale from only around 4.5 million hectares in 1997, he said.

Bukidnon Rep. Juan Miguel Zubiri dropped in at the press conference held at the DENR main office in Quezon City to make a pitch for his proposed bill that would ban logging in public forests but would allow private tree plantations.

Zubiri and Defensor, a former Quezon City congressman, were both among the so-called "Spice Boys" composed of young members of

1st suspension order served

IN DINGALAN, Aurora, DENR officials yesterday began the perilous trek to Barangay Umiray, where the offices of Green Circle Properties Resources Inc. and the sawmill of its sister company, Green Square Properties Corp., are located to serve a suspension order.

It was the first such order following the landslides that killed more than 600 people in Aurora and Quezon in the last two weeks.

And it was the last official act of Meliton Vicente Jr., who has been relieved as DENR chief in Dingalan and is due for reassignment to Cabanatuan City.

Umiray in southern Dingalan and its neighboring town of General Nakar in Quezon make up the site of Green Circle's 27,851.79-hectare estate.

Vicente received the copy of the order Monday night from Regidor de Leon and Ricardo Calderon, DENR regional executive director and regional forestry chief, respectively.

De Leon, who signed the order based on a Nov. 21 memorandum from Defensor, said Green Circle had "failed to protect its area from timber poachers."

The DENR Central Luzon office received Defensor's memorandum last Friday.

While the suspension was for "immediate implementation," it did not explain why it was being served after 15 days.

the House in the previous Congress.

'Mercenary'

But Anakpawis Rep. Crispin Beltran demanded that Defensor resign his post.

"Defensor's defense of the logging firms is a gross betrayal of the victims and survivors of the latest disasters," said the militant party-list lawmaker. "He is looking at the entire matter from a purely business and mercenary perspective."

Beltran said Defensor's posture betrayed the alleged a.i.-talk, no-action stance of the President vis-a-vis the destruction of the forests.

With hundreds of Filipinos dead or missing, "isn't it a convincing enough reason to ban logging completely and revoke all logging permits?" he said.

Before Congress deliberates on yet another law in reaction to the recent disaster, lawmakers must first consider that logging companies are supposedly hiring and equipping illegal cutters to do the dirty work outside their government-designated areas, according to another militant party-list representative, Bayan

Muna's Teodoro Casilio.

He also noted that only P5 million had been allocated for forest protection in the proposed 2005 budget.

The Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas said the DENR had issued orders that may have contributed to massive deforestation and should share the blame with illegal loggers.

One such order was Department Administrative Order No. 59 issued by Environment Secretary Elisea Gozon on her last day at her post on Aug. 31, said KMP spokesperson Carl Anthony Ala.

"Gozon's order facilitates the wholesale conversion of virtually every hectare available of some 10 million hectares of the public domain for uses totally incompatible with the protection and regeneration of forests, and therefore inconsistent with sustainable development," Ala said.

He said DAO 59 was just one of Gozon's 28 "midnight orders." With reports from Philip C. Tubesa, Norman Bordadora and Carlito Pablo in Manila

SC asked to hold Garcia in contempt

By Philip C. Tubeza

ACCUSING embattled Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia of "willful and deliberate" forum-shopping, the Office of the Ombudsman yesterday asked the Supreme Court to dismiss Garcia's petition to stop a forfeiture case against him.

Not only should the petition be dismissed but Garcia and his lawyer should also be held in contempt, said Ombudsman Special Prosecutor Dennis Villa-Ignacio in his comment to the court.

Garcia, a former Armed Forces comptroller, was suspended without pay and restricted to quarters after he was accused of amassing P143 million in unexplained wealth. He has been charged before a military court and the anti-graft court.

In another unexplained wealth case, the Ombudsman also filed a petition for forfeiture against Lt. Col. George Rabusa who is charged with amassing wealth and property "manifestly out of proportion to his salary during his incumbency as a soldier and public officer."

Rabusa, who was AFP budget officer under Garcia, is accused of having accumulated P43 million in unexplained wealth.

Villa-Ignacio said Garcia was resorting to forum-shopping when he questioned before both the Sandiganbayan and the Supreme Court the anti-graft court's jurisdiction to try the forfeiture case against him.

Forum-shopping occurs when a petitioner "institutes two or more actions or proceedings grounded on the same cause, on the gamble that one or the other court would make a favorable judgement," he explained.

Villa-Ignacio deplored the "arrogance" of Garcia who apparently filed both petitions on the same day.

He said Garcia was "disrespectfully trifling with the administration of justice for, with his strategy, he is soliciting the danger of conflicting resolutions on the same issue by this honorable court and the honorable Sandiganbayan."

Villa-Ignacio also challenged Garcia's contention that the Sandiganbayan had no jurisdiction over him and that Ombudsman had no power to prosecute him.

He said the anti-graft court had jurisdiction over forfeiture cases involving high-ranking military officers under the Anti-Graft and Corrupt Practices Act.

The Ombudsman also has the authority to investigate cases of unexplained wealth and initiate forfeiture proceedings, he said.

In its petition against Rabusa, the Office of the Ombudsman said it had determined that a prima facie case existed against Rabusa for amassing huge amounts of money and properties "manifestly out of proportion to his salary during his incumbency as a soldier and public officer."

Included as respondents were Rabusa's wife Debbie and father-in-law Felix Arevalo for allegedly acting as "conspirators, conduits, dummies and fronts" of the colonel.

Rabusa tried to explain the dramatic increase in his net worth by saying that from 1993 to 2001, he had received a P4.1 million inheritance and "financial aid from his parents-in-law."

According to the petition, Rabusa declared in his Statements of Assets, Liabilities and Net Worth P13.5 million in government salaries and income from other sources earned from 1990 to 2003.

He also declared that his wife had received a partial inheritance and donations in the amount of P4.1 million.

The Ombudsman however said Rabusa's declared income "is itself highly questionable" and his wife's inheritance "has no basis."

"No evidence is available on record to support the claim that indeed the respondent and his wife received the alleged donations and inheritance in the stated amounts," the petition said.

Rabusa's SALN also revealed that his total personal and family expenses amounted to P21 million.

"The respondent and his family had been spending more than what can legitimately be sustained by his salary and income from known sources," the Ombudsman's petition said.

It also said that Rabusa failed to sufficiently explain the sources of his undeclared investments, assets and funds amounting to P43 million. With a report from Margaux G. Ortiz and Armand N. Nocum

No extended week for construction, health workers

WORKERS in the construction and health industries are exempt from the compressed work week scheme being promoted by the Department of Labor and Employment.

Labor Assistant Secretary Benedicto Bitonio Jr. said workers involved in manual labor, employed in hospitals, and exposed to hazardous conditions were not covered by the extended work days because it could harm their health.

"We balanced the concerns of workers and employers. We need to protect the workers. Prolonged exposure to harmful chemicals or disease-causing bacteria in their work places could pose health and safety problems for them," Bitonio told the inquirer in a phone interview.

Labor Secretary Patricia Sto. Tomas signed the "advisory" encouraging a shorter work week for companies to cut on costs and improve the productivity of workers.

He said the DOLE finalized the guidelines for the compressed work week scheme on Dec. 2. Some companies in the electronics industry are already implementing the scheme, he said.

Ukraine talks fail to end political crisis

KIEV—A tentative deal to ease Ukraine's political crisis foundered Tuesday over the opposition's refusal to endorse constitutional changes and President Leonid Kuchma's rejection of the call to fire his prime minister.

An initial agreement envisaged parliament's simultaneous passage of the opposition-demanded electoral changes to prevent fraud in the Dec. 26 presidential election rerun between opposition leader Viktor Yushchenko and Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich, and the government-pushed constitutional reform that would trim presidential powers. But that deal appeared in jeopardy after six-hour, European-mediated talks between Yushchenko, Yanukovich and outgoing President Leonid Kuchma.

A somber Kuchma told reporters that the parties failed to agree on the constitutional reform and on the opposition's push for Yanukovich's resignation.

"A conciliatory commission will start working tomorrow," he said, expressing hope that it would "achieve success and solve the issues that we failed to solve."

The compromise agreement signed after the talks contained Kuchma's pledge to reshuffle the Central Election Commission—a key opposition demand—and emphasized the need to pass electoral changes to ensure "a fair and transparent vote."

However, the lack of consensus on the constitutional changes made the implementation of those pledges unlikely.

On Tuesday, Yushchenko backers now in their third straight week of protests in a sprawling tent camp in downtown Kiev, lashed out at what they described as "Kuchma's ploy."

"We have been peaceful, so far," said a protester who identified himself only as Vyacheslav from the city of Rivne. But if Yushchenko wants to force Kuchma to concede defeat in his attempt to hand power to his chosen successor, "we are ready," Vyacheslav said—a tacit threat that the demonstrators could turn to violence.

At a barricade blocking the entrance to the Cabinet building, Yushchenko's orange-clad backers remained determined not to let "a single bureaucrat enter," said Adam Yanakievich from Kiev.

"Kuchma and Yanukovich are trying our patience," Yanakievich said.

Oleksandr Zinchenko, a lawmaker and Yushchenko's campaign manager, said prospects of reaching compromise in Parliament on Tuesday appeared dim. "What sense does it make to vote for the political reform if we failed to reach agreement on key issues?" he said.

Zinchenko said Kuchma was refusing to meet the key opposition demand to fire Yanukovich, and indicated that reshuffling the elect on commission and electoral changes were also in doubt.

A similar compromise deal between Yushchenko's supporters and pro-government lawmakers fell apart Saturday, when opposition lawmakers refused to endorse the constitutional reform. AP

Attack on US consulate shows militants' capability

DUBAI—The daring assault on the US consulate in western Saudi Arabia—the first high-profile attack in seven months in the kingdom—served as a frightening reminder that the country still has a long road to eradicating the terror threats that have plagued the country for more than a year and a half.

The significance of the attack, analysts say, is the target, timing and element of surprise, three factors that may force a closer look at the Saudi government's efforts in fighting terror.

"Here is an American consulate that was targeted. It was penetrated. They managed to go through the security, which should have been as tough and as solid as a shield. It shows that American targets in Saudi Arabia, no matter how well protected, are vulnerable to these kind of attacks," said Abdul Khaleq Abdullah, an Emirates-based political analyst.

The consulate—like all US diplomatic buildings and other Western compounds in Saudi Arabia—has been heavily fortified and guarded since last year's series of bombings against targets housing foreigners, making it one of the most protected locations in the Red Sea port city of Jeddah. Guard posts are located on the corners of the compound. A road open to civilian traffic runs along part of the wall.

The attack appears to be a message from militants that despite an aggressive crackdown by Saudi authorities, sleeper cells remain intact and able to launch spectacular attacks.

"This was a very hard target to attack, and they pulled it off. Whether Saudi security forces were lax, following their successes over the past few months, is debatable," said Dina Rashwan, a Cairo-based expert on Muslim militants.

In Washington, US state department spokesperson Adam Ereli said security measures at the consulate were good enough so that most employees were able to retreat to safe areas. First, he said, the attackers were forced to abandon their vehicle when prevented by security from entering the compound; then because of "security measures in place" they were also unable to penetrate the building where the consulate offices were located.

"The Marine security guard detachment and the regional security officer assigned to the consulate general took defensive measures to protect the employees on the compound at that time, alerting them to the attack and moving them to safe haven areas," Ereli said.

Whether or not the attackers accomplished their goal, the analysts said the midday attack will certainly boost the morale of extremist groups and their sympathizers and raise questions about the effectiveness of the Saudi government's efforts to rein them in.

"We have seen a drop in terrorism and the violence in Saudi Arabia, which lends itself to the claim that the Saudis were successful, that they were doing something and they were serious about it. But attacks like these are beyond any state's control and put a complete and total end to it," said Abdullah.

The attack was well received on websites with militant links, something both Abdullah and Rashwan said was expected.

"Their confidence will be boosted, especially after the Saudi government had succeeded in the past few months in their crackdown. This attack will encourage others to carry out similar attacks, and will lift their morale after several setbacks. For the government, this was a security failure. For the militants, this was a military victory," Rashwan said. He said it was significant that the attack came after a lull and without warning.

"The Americans usually provide warnings of possible terror threats. This time, there were none," he said.

In Washington, Adel al-Jubeir, foreign affairs adviser to Crown Prince Abdullah, said the government had been at a higher threat level because of expectations of an attack.

"We had indications that led us to increase the level of alert and to beef up security in Jeddah and in other areas," he said.

The series of attacks on Western targets in Saudi Arabia started in 2003, when car bombs targeted three compounds housing foreign workers in Riyadh. Since then, the government has made significant efforts to end terrorism in the kingdom, notably in an intense crackdown on Islamic militant cells that has included arresting and killing many key militants. It has clamped down on charities suspected of funneling money to terrorists, and initiated a public relations campaign to undermine support for militants.

The result seems to have been a quieting of attacks—until Monday.

Monday's attack was the first high-profile assault since May, when 22 people were killed, including 19 foreigners, by militants who took over a resort complex in Khobar and held hostages for 25 hours. AP

Bush insists on Jan. 30 Iraq polls

BAGHDAD—The presidents of Iraq and the United States vowed Monday to stick to the Jan. 30 date for landmark elections, despite a flare-up of violence that left about 100 dead in three days.

"I assured the president that it is necessary for the Iraqi people to vote on Jan. 30," said US President George W. Bush, speaking to reporters at the White House with interim Iraqi President Ghazi al-Yawar at his side.

Yawar said after their meeting that it was unfair to describe the insurgents aiming to derail the polls as Sunni Muslims.

The rebels "are a mix of people who have one thing in common: hatred to the Iraq society and hatred to democracy. People who are trying to stop us from having our first elections," he said.

Yawar appealed for international help in holding the elections after at least 24 people were killed in attacks on Sunday alone and about 100 in a three-day period.

The killings included five more US marines whose deaths in attacks last week in the restive province of Al-Anbar, west of Baghdad, were announced by the US military on Monday.

Three Iraqi national guards were killed and 11 wounded in a roadside bomb attack close to the town of Hilla, south of Baghdad.

But speaking in Washington with NBC television ahead of his talks with Bush, Yawar rejected claims that have come from Iraqi political parties and even a top UN official for the elections to be postponed.

"After reviewing the situation, I think the worst thing to do is to postpone elections. This will give a tactical victory to the insurgents, to the forces of darkness."

"We are asking the United Nations, the whole international community, to help us."

A senior UN official had warned at the weekend that elections could not be held in the current climate of violence, backing warnings by Sunni politicians in Iraq.

Lakhdar Brahimi, a special advisor to UN Secretary General Kofi Annan and until recently UN envoy in Iraq, said the Jan. 30 vote could only take place "if first and foremost security improves."

The United States is already planning to boost troops numbers in Iraq to 150,000 for the elections from the current 138,000, the highest number since May 2003 when it declared an end to major combat in Iraq. AFP

US resists Kyoto talks at int'l climate confab

BUENOS AIRES—The United States resisted calls Monday for talks on the Kyoto Protocol at an international conference here on climate change.

Delegates at the UN-sponsored meeting lamented the refusal by the United States, as well as China and India, to sign the treaty aimed at reducing greenhouse gases.

The Kyoto accords, the world's most ambitious and complex environmental treaty, legally commit 39 industrial nations and territories, including Japan and Europe, to trim their output of six greenhouse gases, especially carbon dioxide, by at least 5.2 percent by 2012, compared with 1990 levels.

Russia's ratification last month gave the protocol the final stamp of approval needed to go into force on Feb. 16.

But the list of signatories to the international pact does not include the United States, China and India—all major culprits in rising greenhouse gas emissions. China and India produce more greenhouse gases as their economies rapidly grow.

And the United States, the largest producer of global-warming gases, on Monday rejected any change of position.

Washington's senior climate change negotiator, Harlan Watson, called any talk of a post-2012 regime, when Kyoto runs out, "totally premature."

"Economic development is essential for adopting measures to address climate change," he said.

"For the United States, any future treaty should not hurt the country's economy and should cover every country in the world, including developing nations," he said. US President George W. Bush's administration rejected the treaty in 2001. AFP

More solons seek Annan's resignation

WASHINGTON—More US congressional Republicans called Monday for the resignation of UN Secretary General Kofi Annan, with one suggesting the UN chief should go to jail.

"Kofi Annan must go," Republican Rep. Dan Burton told reporters as he commented on the UN's oil-for-food program and the billions of dollars former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had managed to divert from it.

Scott Garrett, a Republican from Indiana, said the question was whether Annan "should be in jail."

Vito Passella of New York said "not only should Kofi Annan step aside because of oil-for-food, but for the good of the UN and its ability to carry on its missions."

Rep. Jeff Flake declined to call for Annan's resignation, but said UN cooperation was needed in the investigation of the oil-for-food program.

Flake and some of his colleagues have proposed legislation that would withhold part of UN dues until the world body fully cooperates with the probe. AFP

Root causes

THE WORLD knows Oxfam as a development, relief and campaigning organization that works with others to find lasting solutions to poverty and suffering around the world. Right here, in the wake of flood and landslides that killed more than a thousand people, Oxfam has sent teams to Real, Infanta and General Nakar in Quezon Province where they will spend the next four weeks providing immediate relief for

EDITORIAL approximately 68,000 people. Oxfam will assist with water and sanitation relief while providing materials such as plastic sheeting to improve the living conditions in the evacuation centers and homes damaged by the floods and landslides. Afterwards, it will also provide seeds to farmers, fishnets to fisherfolk, and other basic tools and materials so that people can rebuild their livelihoods. The Oxfam teams will also survey the needs of the people they help, including water sources and the quality of water to ensure that waterborne diseases are prevented from spreading.

A great deal of the difficult task of helping people help themselves is undertaken by groups such as Oxfam, and when such groups speak out, people should listen.

In a report released this week, Oxfam focused on the decreasing levels of foreign aid money set aside for development NGOs by rich countries. It warns that the UN's Millennium Development Goals on poverty reduction are being put at risk. It also decries what it perceives to be the tendency to attach too many conditions to foreign assistance, such as spending caps and fiscal targets to foreign aid contributions.

In the same report, Oxfam expressed concern that anti-terrorism efforts are endangering foreign aid budgets, with security concerns taking priority over poverty reduction in dictating where foreign aid funds are spent. For example, over the past three years, levels of American aid to Israel, Egypt, Jordan, Iraq, Turkey and Afghanistan have equaled the aid to the rest of the world combined.

In London, Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf, together with British Prime Minister Tony Blair, issued a joint statement in which they manifested their devotion to the War on Terror, but also said that the war was a short-term military approach to the issue. Significantly, the two leaders also called for a long term approach to fighting terrorism, which entails attacking the root causes of the problem. They agreed that these root causes were linked to poverty, deprivation and denial of freedom to people. Pakistan's president was more emphatic in an interview with the BBC: "We are fighting [terrorism] in its immediate context, but we are not fighting it in its strategic, long-term context."

Musharraf pointedly remarked, "What gives rise to a young man or woman to give up her or his life? It is the political disputes and we need to resolve them and also illiteracy and poverty... These combined are breeding grounds of extremism and terrorism."

The statements of Oxfam and of the Pakistan president are, in a sense, two sides of the same coin. Groups such as Oxfam cannot do their work in conflict-ridden areas, and suffer when foreign aid is curtailed to buy bombs instead of allocating funds to help people emerge from poverty. But prudent leaders who use military methods also realize that total war cannot be waged forever. Armed might is, at best, from the point of view of those engaged in statecraft, a delaying operation if the root causes of conflict aren't addressed.

Hermann Goering uttered the notorious Nazi slogan, "Guns before butter," which indicates that only a mentality that glorifies conquest and demeans humanity thinks that bullets can do more than growing and sharing food. Contentment breeds security, after all. Armed conflict only breeds hatred and misery.

Both Oxfam and Musharraf in a sense have made similar criticisms of American policy, which presumes security can be the offshoot of waging war. These views from divergent sources should make Filipinos pause to reflect on our national priorities. The Philippines has been made anxious by terrorists and terrorism, but wiser counsel says peace and quiet can only be achieved by reducing the incidence of poverty, and by educating people and making them healthier. A more peaceful and productive country cannot be achieved at the point of a gun.

End the debate, ban all logging

THE DEBATE has started again: to ban or not to ban all logging, both legal and illegal. As usual the debaters are divided between those who argue for a total log ban to save what remains of the fast dwindling forests, and those who argue that licensed loggers are good because they protect the forests from illegal loggers who would otherwise denude them. Curiously, among the latter are Michael Defensor, the new chief of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, whose primary concern should be to preserve the environment.

The legal loggers, so goes the latter argument parroted by the DENR, cut only mature trees, employ forest rangers who guard the residual forests and replant the denuded areas. Without them guarding the forests, illegal loggers would cut everything and leave the forests destroyed. After them would come the charcoal-makers who would cut whatever is left, including the seedlings which are easier to turn into charcoal, and after them would come the slash-and-burn farmers, the kasingineros.

The trouble with this argument is that we have had licensed loggers and concessionaires and the so-called "sustainable development" for decades, but our virgin forests keep getting raped at an alarming rate. If licensed concessionaires are protecting the forests, where are they? How come the forests they are supposed to protect keep dwindling? And if they are replanting and reforesting, where are these reforested areas? How come denuded forest areas are spreading?

The only "sustainable development" people see is the continued growth of the wealth of logging families. The well-known names in Mindanao are the Almendrases, Antoninos and Piazas, all of whom have members of the younger generation elected to Congress. But the mountains of Mindanao are as bald as the head of Puga. What did they do when they still had the logging concessions? Did they do any reforestation? Where are these reforested areas?

In short, the theory of "sustainable development" is just that, a theory, and not a practical solution. I suspect that it was an idea thought up and fed by the loggers to the DENR. The government likes the idea because it relieves them of the job of guarding and reforesting the mountains.

As I See It

In fact, I think that is one reason Defensor is defending the legal loggers: he knows his department alone cannot do the job it is supposed to do. There is never enough money or personnel for that. And there are always loggers to use as convenient scapegoats whenever anything goes wrong, such as the recent landslides and floods that killed hundreds of people and destroyed hundreds of millions of pesos worth of crops and property.

The DENR is among the most coveted Cabinet positions in the government. So many officials, environmentalists and non-environmentalists alike, have taken turns running it, but nobody has been able to make a difference. Forest denudation continues at an alarming rate.

If they cannot do anything to save the forests, why do they covet the job? Is it because the loggers who make a lot of money from the forests are generous to those who cooperate with them? And not only loggers but also miners, quarry operators, commercial fishermen and land-grabbers?

Should we have a total or selective ban on logging? The answer seems simple: we have had selective logging for decades and it is obviously a failure. Isn't it time we tried the other method?

With a total log ban, we would know that any log or lumber we see is illegal. Right now, we cannot tell the difference between a legally cut log and one that has been illegally cut. We have to take the word of the owner that it was legally acquired.

In fact, it is common practice now for logging concessionaires to cut timber illegally outside their concessions and then claim they came from their own concessions. The DENR's forest rangers cannot prove otherwise. And anyway they are so poorly paid that it is easy for the loggers to convince them that they have not done anything wrong. With a total log ban, this ploy will no longer work. A log is illegally cut wherever it comes from.

But where will we get wood for construction and furniture-making? Do what other countries without virgin forests do: import from countries foolish enough to cut their own forests. Japan imported most of our logs during the heyday of the logging tycoons.

Or go into tree farming. The conventional wisdom in tree farming in the Philippines is to plant either fruit trees or the higher-priced hardwood trees for their wood, such as narra, kamagong, mahogany, or molave. But these are slow-growing trees and take decades to grow big enough to be harvested. Before that, the farmer's family starves.

But why not plant fast-growing trees along with the hardwoods so they can be harvested earlier for the farmer to live on while waiting for the more costly hardwood to mature? The acacia and giant ipil-ipil can be harvested in five years. What's more, they are self-propagating. The pods pop when ripe and spread their seeds, which germinate quickly.

The same is true with the lowly kakawati, or madre cacao, which is so easy to propagate. Suck a twig into the soil and it grows. That is why we see kakawati trees growing in rows along property lines. Their branches were used as posts for fencing and then grew into trees. Leave a kakawati tree alone in a forest for a few years and there would soon be a whole forest of them. What's more, the kakawati bears in great profusion beautiful pink blossoms that can compare to the more famous cherry blossoms of Japan.

Giving

THERE'S THE RUB

eternal gratitude. That expectation being often realized in scenes that show precisely that, or at least that show the beneficiaries breaking into tears and with voices cracking profusely thanking their benefactors.

I'm not knocking gratitude. People ought to be grateful for being helped. But the givers can do as well with being more self-effacing. True giving is one where the giver disappears. The kind of giving where the giver looms larger than life is called PR. True giving is one that allows the recipient to cling to his dignity. And in any case, the victims in this case aren't all calling for charity, some are calling for help to bring them back on their feet. One farmer in Dugayan said it best: What they needed was seedlings to grow things with after they've cleared their fields of mud. A woman in Real also said she just needed a small amount for a new livelihood; she lost her tricycle to the floods.

But whether the need is for food or seedlings, medicine or capital, the enormity of those needs must cow us to silence, or invisibility. Deacon Mario Van Loon, who's supervising the work in Mt. Carmel, suggests that enormity when he says it will take at least half a year for the affected areas to raise themselves by their bootstraps. If there's any attitude to take here, it is that however you give, you can never give quite enough.

My second suggestion is for Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and other officials to stop saying let us unite and rise over this. At the very least, it is superfluous. All you have to do is go to the relief centers to see the spontaneous outpouring of sympathy from everyone and their sincere desire to help the victims. This country has never had problems uniting when beset by a common threat or affliction. Like I said, disasters bring out the best in us. You do not have to cajole Filipinos to rise above themselves during these times.

But more than this, the call is insidious. It is premised, like the same call that attended the kidnapping of Angelo de la Cruz et al., on forgetting who caused the disaster and filling our minds only with feel-good thoughts. Why on earth would I want to unite with the loggers—and the real criminals, to repeat, are the legal loggers and not the illegal ones—and rise over this with them? It was their logs that tumbled down the mountain and mangled the children who slept the sleep of the innocent, dreaming of Christmas, and buried them in the mud. I do not want to unite with them, I want to haul their asses to court and seek justice for the dead.

My last suggestion is for all of us. There's nothing more breathtaking than seeing people tying themselves to a tree and jumping in to the floodwaters to rescue the drowning. There's nothing more inspiring than seeing the youth toiling day and night in relief centers and people everywhere chipping in to help the hapless. There's nothing more satisfying than public officials, businessmen and the rich of Metro Manila rushing to send trucks and choppers and equipment to the afflicted areas to rescue the hungry and dying.

But why in God's name do we have to wait for disasters to do this? Why can't public officials and businessmen and the rich simply do this by not pilaging the treasury, by paying decent wages and distributing goods through land and asset reform? Why can't we rise to heights of selflessness, or show an ardent desire to help others, or serve the people, as the activists put it, other than through relief operations? Why can't we tie ourselves to a tree or post and throw the other end to a country that is being swept away by the rampaging waters?

There's one other property of giving. Like God, it has no beginning and it has no end.

Wonderful people, awful gov't

COMMENTARY

Denis Murphy

"HOW does such a wonderful people wind up with such an awful government?" a reporter asked me recently.

I told him I didn't know. All the academic and ideological reasons offered to explain the contradiction faked once the Philippines is compared with its neighbors. Several Southeast and South Asian countries are as corrupt, colonized, religion-ridden, disaster-prone and violent as the Philippines, maybe more so, but still they progress, at least economically. The Philippines doesn't.

The ordinary people, the Metro Manila urban poor among them, are nearly as bad off now as they were in the mid 1960s, and yet they keep on organizing to work for a fairer deal from society. They are still hardworking, courteous, good-humored, welcoming and hopeful. Signs of all these were seen during the recent typhoons, and not only in Manila.

There are other signs, however, that their hopefulness is fading. Barbara Ward warned long ago that the world's quickest vanishing resource was the patience of the poor.

Since the mid 1960s we have had a dictatorship, a rebirth of democracy under President Corason Aquino, a technocratic government under President Fidel V. Ramos, a long bad drama with President Joseph Estrada and what might be called "drift" under the present administration. Despite the various forms it has taken, the government has scarcely made any difference for the poor. Neither has the largest Christian population in Asia had the moral impact that might be expected.

Reform efforts continue, but we should remember past efforts and how they fared. Present proposals for reform, for example, those outlined by Randy David in his column "Alternatives to a dysfunctional society" last Nov. 28, are pretty much the same as those that were tried and failed in the past, namely, authoritarian government (proposed by Washington SyCip), popular uprising (by R. Sionil Jose) and elite-dominated reform movements (by David himself).

It seems impossible to know for sure where to go until we answer the question raised in the first paragraph of this article and the answer is tested against the experience of other Asian countries. My own belief is that the answer to our problems will be quite different from those of other countries. Maybe since our elite has failed us, the answer must be to complement their influence with another social force: the ordinary poor people. But we must act.

What direction to take? Why not, as Robert Frost wrote in another context, choose the less traveled road?

*I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in the wood, and I,
I took the one less travelled
And that has made all the difference.*

Maybe what is needed is an all-out effort to organize the poor into mass-based, democratic and non-violent people's organizations that can pursue their own goals in society, and muster enough people's participation to effectively influence the decisions that affect their lives. The people's organizations can be religion-inspired or otherwise, large or small, credit unions, labor unions, cooperatives, peasants' associations, urban poor groups, fishermen's associations, indigenous people's associations, homeowners' groups, etc. as long as the goals are set by the people and they have an understanding of people power and its role in transforming society from the bottom up.

Such an approach has never been undertaken wholeheartedly by reform-minded people.

At a recent workshop of NGO partners of the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace, the NGOs summarized all the problems they encountered in their work into four overall problems and found that to solve them, the main hope was organized political, social and economic pressure by the country's poor on the elite that now controls all decision-making.

The first of the four problem areas was "unbalanced use of natural resources," including among other matters land-grabbing, abusive mining and logging and exclusion of the rural and urban poor from land. The use of the country's resources is not "fair to all" as the Rotary signs demand.

The second problem was "fragile democracy," including militarization; corruption, elite control of government, unfair labor laws and other injustices.

The third area was called "homogenization of culture," for want of a better name. It concerns the current trend of mostly Western alien cultures to swamp the national cultures.

The fourth and final area concerned international free trade and the World Trade Organization. This concern was illustrated by the very real fear of the country's three million rice farmers that unlimited rice imports in the coming year will destroy their livelihood. They know the government is asking the WTO for a delay in the lifting of import controls, but they doubt it is making a truly all-out effort. There are few rich and influential players in rice production.

Maybe the country that made people power world famous at Edsa I will show that people power cannot only oust the bad groups, but bring in good ones which will take the goals of the poor as their own goals.

Taxing virtues, subsidizing vices

MONDAY'S INQUIRER featured a full-page open letter to our Senate with most impressive signatories: former National Economic and Development Authority (NEDA) Secretary Solita Collas-Monsod and several former finance secretaries: Vicente R. Jayme, Jesus B. Estanislao, Roberto de Ocampo, Ernest Leung.

The gist of the letter was simple: bite the bullet and push through with the increases in cigarette taxes. The letter was written in response to Congress' reluctance to support the Enrile Bill (Senate Bill 1815), itself a compromise around the heavily contested proposal to increase so-called "sin taxes" on cigarettes and alcohol.

The rationale behind sin taxes is that practices such as smoking and drinking should be taxed more heavily because they have social consequences, costs which are passed on to taxpayers. Congress' snail's pace in dealing with sin taxes once again shows our distorted priorities, and which can be summarized as taxing virtues and subsidizing vices. Since much has been said about the sin taxes, including Monsod's incisive column about three weeks ago summarizing the reasons we need to hike the tobacco taxes, I'm going to concentrate instead on the matter of "virtue taxes."

Promoting illiteracy
For starters, I'd suggest our former finance secretaries look into the Department of Finance's refusal to reconsider a plan to tax the sale, importation, printing and publication of books. The book trade has been exempted from the 10-percent value-added tax (VAT) but the finance people now want to lift the exemption, despite protests from the Philippine Educational Publishers' Association and the Catholic Educational Association of the Philippines.

Currently, Filipinos read far less than many of our Asian neighbors. There are many reasons for this, but the high cost of books is certainly the main obstacle to reading. Just look at the enthusiastic crowds at our book fairs, people of all ages browsing but many unable to buy because of the high prices. If current prices of books already seem astronomical, an additional 10-percent tax will send book sales plummeting even more rapidly. I wouldn't mind if the taxes are plowed back into developing a local book industry but that isn't happening either.

All around us, our neighbors have actually reduced import taxes on books to encourage their citizens to read more. Not only that, in Indonesia, Thailand and China, they've poured in money to translate as many books as possible. For all the international publicity around censorship in China, you'd be surprised at all the books they've been translating: from ponderous French philosophers to management gurus like Covey. Likewise, when I go to India, I go crazy running through their bookstores because they reprint, through special arrangements with the publishers, all the latest books.

We will pay for this neglect of books. Just think of the next generation of Filipino semi-literate teaching in our schools and writing textbooks far worse than the ones exposed recently. I predict, too, that we will lose out to our book-reading neighbors in the globalized international economy. It's not surprising we end up exporting Filipinos mainly to do mechanical work, rather than capturing a greater share of segments of the outsourcing market—software development, for example—where critical thinking skills are essential, skills honed from reading.

Penalizing hard work
Let's move to another example of "virtue taxes." I have been getting complaints from tiangge vendors about the Bureau of Internal Revenue visiting and checking if they are issuing receipts. I know these vendors are making money but it's not like they're raking in millions. Many of them come from outside Manila, investing in transportation costs and using their Sundays to bring in extra income, some with homegrown vegetables and home-cooked products.

The government seems to go out of its way to tax entrepreneurship. It's not just the small businesses that are victimized. One reason for our economic stagnation is that we have a very low savings rate. But I'm not surprised here—people aren't strongly motivated to save because interest rates are so low and because the government imposes a 15-percent withholding tax on those tiny savings.

It just doesn't make sense, the way the government taxes frugality and small-business people trying to make an honest living, while corporate tax evaders go scot-free, while we postpone sin taxes.

Wages of sin
Let me get personal here as we move back to the sin taxes. I used to be a heavy smoker. How heavy was heavy? Here in the Philippines there were three-pack days, but overseas, I'd sometimes survive on one pack. Cigarette prices in the Philippines were, and still are, among the cheapest in the world, thanks to low taxes.

The same applies to alcohol. I enjoy my beer and I know that there's always a greater temptation to binge on a night out in Manila because alcoholic drinks are far too cheap here.

Sin taxes can help moderate consumption of cigarettes and alcohol, even as it generates government revenues. Yet we seem so reluctant to work on the sin taxes. Pardon the religious metaphors, but society will reap the wages of sin, if we continue to act so slowly. We hear propagandists for the tobacco firms arguing that impoverished tobacco farmers in Ilocos stand to lose from the proposed hike in sin taxes. But are they aware that diseases caused by alcohol and tobacco have consistently ranked among the leading causes of death in the Philippines?

Tobacco use isn't just linked to cancer but also heart diseases and chronic obstructive pulmonary diseases (asthma, bronchitis and emphysema). Much less has been said about the problems around alcohol abuse but liver disease—much of which is associated with alcoholism—now ranks 13th as a cause of death. We also don't talk enough about social problems around alcohol dependency, from work absenteeism to domestic violence.

We have to reduce our subsidies on vices. Let's push through with the sin taxes and allocate part of the revenues to public health programs. And yes, let's use part of it to develop alternative livelihoods for tobacco farmers.

A final word here: The government should rethink the cost-effectiveness of its tax strategy. It just doesn't make sense that the government is rushing to impose VAT on books to generate P272 million while dragging its feet on the sin taxes, which could bring in P11.3 billion. As for cracking the whip to collect taxes on small businesses' Christmas sales, amid government neglect of social services, the environment, the economy—why does the word "extortion" come to my mind?

The heart of Morocco

AT LARGE

Rina Jimenez-David

FEZ—Driving in from the southeast, down from the Atlas Mountains, one enters this former royal capital through the "new towns," or as the former French colonizers put it, the "villes nouvelles." These are typical suburbs, with wide roads, gated communities, lively commercial areas in modern dress.

But the real heart of the city, and indeed, the "symbolic heart of Morocco" is the medina, the old walled city that lies in a valley.

The major Moroccan cities were all built around such old walled cities, a cluster of buildings, shops and houses protected by massive thick earthen and clay walls, all of which are pierced by holes which, so our reliable guide Aziz claims, were used both to look out for approaching strangers as well as to speed up the drying process of the clay walls.

Still, the old medina of Fez is widely regarded as the most magnificent of these walled cities. It is one of the "largest living medieval cities in the world," marked for preservation by the Unesco as one of the world's greatest treasures.

And indeed what a treasure of a living city it is! Walking through its narrow passageways and cobbled streets, one's senses are assaulted by a bewildering array of sights, sounds, smells—the aroma of spices mingling with the tang of freshly picked oranges, bright woven scarves, jelababs and caftans waving in the wind alongside raw cuts of beef and mutton, slabs of pink and lemon yellow nougats, studded with almonds and pistachios, alongside lamps and intricately carved candles.

It seems everything created by human hands and nature as well, save for brass appliances and cars, are sold here. One member of our group yelled in astonishment as he passed a small wooden shop: "Hey, they sell violins in there!" A university professor ducked into a store to buy a Berber drum for his 9-year-old grandson. I had set out on a mission to buy dates and walnuts for my husband, and came upon a shop selling such a wide variety of dates I had to taste each one of them, of course!

ONE never knew what would be coming from the nearest corner. Rounding the bend, one might suddenly confront a donkey dragging along a loaded cart, the only form of transportation allowed within the medina. While walking, one kept one's ears peeled for shouts of "Atencion! Atencion!" a signal to quickly stand off to the side unless one wished to be trampled on by a smelly donkey or a heavy wheelbarrow.

Turning into a corner, we were startled by a construction worker in a bright yellow raincoat, a pickaxe slung over his shoulder. We saw schoolchildren coming from or just going to school, old men in tattered jelababs and filthy turbans, touts and amateur "guides" in leather jackets and jeans, and most incredibly, a young girl of about 6 with a pink backpack, strolling along with us as she sang to herself, smiling about secrets only she knew, then turning into a narrow alley and entering through a wooden doorway.

Some 200,000 people still call the medina of Fez home—"too many for a city that needs preserving," commented Aziz. And for them, it is a real neighborhood and not just an exotic showcase or relic of the past.

Aziz, who was born and grew up in the medina of Fez, though his family has since moved out to the new villages, brought us to a neighborhood baker, to whom families brought loaves of unbaked bread and picked up the warm, baked loaves after 30 minutes or so. In the few minutes that we stood in the doorway, about six people arrived with wooden trays bearing pale dough shaped into the customary round loaves and covered with towels. Some bore markings to tell the baker to whom they belonged. "No problem," said Aziz, "even if a loaf comes without markings, the baker knows to whom it belongs."

THE NEIGHBORHOOD baker is a trusted person in the neighborhood, and one who knows, just by counting the number of loaves one brings, how many people there are in the family, and if one is expecting visitors. The baker is also the local center of information, and if one is looking for a resident, one goes to the baker for his or her address, not to the police station.

A visitor can never know, judging from the outside with its narrow alleys, high walls sometimes topped with reed coverings, and imposing wooden doors, what lies behind this secretive exterior.

After winding our way down through the cobbled alleys, we turned into a small courtyard guarded by a wrought iron gate and entered into a larger and truly beautiful inner courtyard with a silent fountain in the center, planted with fragrant roses and strewn with rose petals.

We were at the Palais Menebhi, the former residence of a prominent medina resident who had served as finance minister to two kings. The Menebhi family later sold the palace to a wealthy businessman who decided to convert it into a tea-house and restaurant (upon the urging of tourism officials) and open it to the public. The Palais Menebhi is decorated in typical Moroccan fashion, using the usual elements of tile mosaic, cedar and stucco "worked in place," that is carved on site in intricate and delicate filigree patterns.

In the dining room, seated on low-slung couches and low chairs, we rested our weary feet and feasted on Moroccan fare, the most outstanding of which, I must say, was a tajine of lamb and prunes. The meat was so tender, with the prunes lending a piquant note of sweetness, that I ate more than was properly my share. So full was I that I had no more room for the next dish, a more traditional tajine of chicken and vegetables on a bed of couscous.

Fortified, we set out once more for the alleys and backways, shops and factories, sights, sounds and aromas of the magnificent medina of Fez.

Dressing for the tropics

LOOKING BACK

Ambeth R. Ocampo

ETHEL Colquhoun is a name familiar to the strange birds who frequent places like the Lopez Memorial Museum, the National Library, the UP Main Library or the Rizal Library of the Ateneo. Her Book Two on their travels (London, 1902) is just one of many travel accounts on the Philippines available to researchers or plain interested readers.

Unlike other authors who narrate their trips "around the world," Colquhoun is different because she is a woman. Most travel books are written by men and it is fascinating to see the world from a different angle. She was also an amateur artist and captured what she saw in delightful pen and ink drawings and some watercolors reproduced in color. One wonders where the original notebooks or sketchbooks are today because those images made at the turn of the last century have now attained some historical or anthropological value.

Last weekend, a friend and I were browsing at the Samsonite shop in Glorietta, looking at a wide array of luggage and wondering how sturdy these had to be in order to take the beating of modern air travel (and of course, rough care-less baggage handlers and thieves in foreign airports). In the days when people traveled by sea and train, they had trunks that came complete with drawers and hangers. They were like portable cabinets and definitely weighed more than the 20 kilos allowed for economy passengers. These wouldn't fit in the overhead bins of planes and would be declared "oversized" today.

Travel in the past seemed such an adventure, requiring real planning, unlike today when you can get a discounted tour package, fly and be assured of hotels and transfers.

Colquhoun traveled in Southern Philippines, visiting Sulu, Dapitan, Cagayan, Misamis and other places that wouldn't be in a tour package today. Come to think of it, foreign governments these days advise their citizens to avoid Mindanao altogether. Thus, it was a delight to read her impressions of the country at the time.

Surely, the Philippine climate has not changed much in a century, although my father claims it was cooler before the war. I attribute this to global warming and his imagination. Colquhoun and her husband wanted to know what to wear in the tropics and couldn't think of anything aside from a wide sun hat.

It seems they brought a number of trunks that eventually got lost, just as luggage gets waylaid today. This is what she recommended that women bring on a trip to the tropics:

"Take for evening wear...the thinnest black gown you can get with long sleeves...not very tight. The reason is that one's arms get mosquito-bitten and that long gloves are out of the question in the heat. It is better to have the dress black because if you are searick and your Chinese servant or your husband packs for you, he will probably put the stuff you shine your patent shoes with on the top, and it will break and indurate the whole trunk. Book-black smells nasty but doesn't show much on black silk. Don't take fine muslins or coloured cottons, except for special occasions. Don't have collars to your frocks, and don't take Paris hats. All these things are a weariness to the flesh."

Reading the above made me grateful for modern conveniences like mosquito repellent (with moisturizer if you want) and, of course, Tupperware and Ziplock bags to contain spills in the luggage.

Like most men, Colquhoun's husband advised her to travel light and just buy clothes along the way. There was not much she wanted in many stops and was promised that Manila shopping would make up for all the disappointment. One did not really need formal clothes since the chances of being invited to a wedding or state dinner were quite slim. So, more on what to bring to the tropics:

"(1) A warm coat and skirt—serge for preference—rain proofed. (2) An unlined alpaca coat and a couple of skirts. (3) Quantities of white cambric and silk blouses, and plenty of linen skirts. (4) Some dark-coloured cambric and silk blouses to match coats and skirts. (5) Some loose wrappers of nun's-veiling. (6) A Panama straw hat, and a burnt straw shape, with one or two made-up 'trimmings.' (7) A couple of evening frocks, say, one coloured and one black, as described above. A high silk bodice to one of these (unlined) will do duty as an afternoon gown."

"With these as foundation, you can count on being neatly and comfortably attired under almost any circumstances—unless, of course, you are going to attend race-meetings or vice-regal garden parties."

These days, we have wash and wear, drip-dry clothes. We have the convenience of washing machines and laundromats, but in those days one really needed laundry and pressing service.

Maybe Colquhoun was just concerned with what to wear socially, but the Spartan list above doesn't mention underwear and sports clothes. One wonders what excess things she took in her trunks that got lost. The above list in itself is a useless bit of trivial data, but when one uses it to compare and contrast what was fashionable and basic a century ago with our own times, it is an exercise in historical reflection and imagination. It aids us in trying to piece together what the Philippines was like at the time.

From what she wrote in her book, Colquhoun seems to have enjoyed her stay in the Philippines.

Offshoot of corruption

FIRST, the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration (Pagasa) was caught sleeping on its job.

Second, blaming the "illegal loggers" for floods and landslides is partly correct. But—Question No. 1—why were they not stopped? But then the illegal loggers are not the only ones guilty of denuding our mountains. The "legal loggers" did most of the cutting of trees. And they were supposed to replant a tree or even two trees for every tree they cut. Question No. 2: Why are our mountains now bare?

The answer to both questions is that the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, which is mandated by law to protect our natural resources—forests being one of them—was busy coddling the illegal and legal loggers these past decades. The floods, landslides, mudflows and devastation that we again experienced last November are an offshoot of government corruption and public indifference.

The government must do something concrete to prevent more disasters from happening again and to save thousands of Filipinos from dying and being rendered homeless. But first, heads should roll at Pagasa and the DENR.

Missed issues in Apec summit

THIS year's Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit, which was held in Chile last Nov. 20, tackled a different agenda. Unlike in their previous meetings, when the participants sought global tariff reductions and ways to boost trade, the world leaders opted to discuss anti-terrorism plans. US President George W. Bush took advantage of the gathering to win international support for the war on Iraq that he initiated.

The Apec summit should have been used to discuss strictly economic issues. It could have discussed on how to respond to the oil price hikes, or how to compensate for the lost jobs of foreign remittance-dependent countries (ours included), or to come up with solutions to the waning tourism problems, all brought about ironically by the Iraq war.

Our country needs to improve its foreign policies because of the economic crisis we're facing. This country doesn't have the luxury of deviating from economic issues to back up President Bush's anti-terrorism campaign. After all, poverty has been the persistent, top terrorist in our country.

Aglipay's clarification on slain journalists

WE wish to clarify some points in the news item titled "Int'l journalist group assails gov't inability to stop murders." (PDI, 12/04/04)

Police Director General Edgar B. Aglipay said the Philippine National Police has no intention of putting the blame for the killing of journalists on the slain journalists themselves, or that it is putting forward ad hoc solutions to the problem. He said the various proposals to stop the rash of killings of journalists—from the implementation of the national identification system to arming media people facing death threats—were made "in good faith."

Aglipay has assured that police investigators are on their toes and making significant progress in solving the killings of journalists. Of the eight "media" killings since Aug. 23, the day he took over as PNP chief, five have already been solved with the appropriate charges filed in court against the suspects. The other killings that happened before that date are also the subject of continuing investigations by field units as a priority of his administration.

The five cases (of Herson Genolan, Gene Boyd Lumawag, Eldie Sablas, Jose Luis Villanueva, Christopher Musajon) are proof that the PNP has not been remiss in its job of going after the killers of journalists.

The PNP chief has urged the public and the media to provide information that could lead to the solution of the other cases. He also said that while the wheels of justice may be perceived by media groups as moving too slow, the fact is that the PNP is doing its job, investigating all cases and ensuring an air-tight case against the suspects who are already in custody.

The PNP chief said he welcomes any constructive dialogue with media groups, local or international, to find a workable solution to the problem, particularly in the rural areas.

Illegal logging area found in Quezon park

LUCENA CITY—As the evil and deadly effects of illegal logging were still visible all over northern Quezon, village officials in Barangay Maliboy in Pagbilao town discovered a new illegal logging area inside the Quezon National Park.

Lawyer Asis Perez, director of Tanggol Kalikasan-Southern Tagalog, an environmental legal defense center, said the village officials went to his office Monday morning and reported to him their discovery.

"I was told that at least 30 pieces of huge freshly cut hardwood tree species were discovered inside the national park," Perez told the Inquirer. "More fallen trees have yet to be discovered because of heavy rains."

He said the barangay officials decided to report their finding to his office "because they suspected that park officials were involved in the illegal cutting."

Arms

Perez said they also suspected that "volunteer flagmen" manning the zigzag road even in the dead of night were also involved as lookouts.

Efforts to stop illegal logging led to proposals to arm forest rangers, which an environment official opposed.

The head of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources in Real town objected to the government's plan of providing firearms to the country's corps of forest rangers.

"Giving arms to the forest rangers supposedly to protect them against illegal loggers is not enough guarantee for their safety. On the contrary, their guns would only pose greater danger as these would only invite attention from other armed groups in the mountain," Cenro Federico Ocampo, DENR Real town chief, told the Inquirer in a phone interview.

"I'm not in favor of arming my forest rangers. That would be risky on their part," he said.

On Wednesday last week, Environment Secretary Michael Defensor announced the arming of forest rangers, in line with President Macapagal-Arroyo's order for a renewed crackdown against illegal loggers in the country.

Ocampo said the illegal loggers are big-time syndicates and composed of fully armed men.

"These illegal loggers possess sophisticated weapons and modern communication technology," he said.

"Government troops are not with us all the time, especially when my forest rangers enter the inner part of the forest," he said.

"But we are more secured if there is no armed security with us during our patrol even if we are unarmed," he added. "What we use is only a little diplomacy and tact so that we can penetrate the deepest part of the forest," he added.

Security

However, he said the firearms will be of great help to the forest rangers manning the checkpoints along the highways.

Communist spokesperson Gregorio "Ka Roger" Rosal said the New People's Army was set to convene a "special people's court" to hear all criminal charges against environment officials and hold them responsible for the high death toll from the storms that recently hit the country.

Rosal said they would include in the charge sheet the past and present secretaries of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources.

"All these DENR secretaries, from the past to the present, are liable for the deaths of the victims because they were the ones who granted permits to these big-time logging concessionaires for them to rape the forest," Rosal said in a mobile phone interview. Delfin Mallari Jr., PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Educational funds used for polls, says gov

CITY OF MALOLOS—Some Bulacan mayors used part of their town's revenues to fund their reelection campaign, causing the shortage of provincial government funds to pay for the salaries and bonuses of teachers hired by the province, Gov. Josefina de la Cruz said.

During the flag-raising ceremony at the capitol on Monday, De la Cruz said she wanted the employees and officials of the provincial government to know the reason for the delay in the payment of salaries of the province's 266 contractual teachers.

She said some mayors and municipal treasurers connived to use and divert the province's share from municipal taxes. The share goes to the special education fund (SEF) of Bulacan that will pay for the teachers' salaries.

She said several towns failed to remit P58 million to the SEF.

"May mga pamahalaang bayan na pinangahasang ginamit ang perang ito noong nakaraang eleksyon (Some town governments dared to use these funds during the last election)," De la Cruz said.

She said these officials are liable for misusing public funds.

She said the mayors concerned should exhaust all legal means to remit what was due the SEF so that the provincial government could release the unpaid November and December salaries of the teachers.

"Sorry na lang sa mga mayors na nagwalda ng pera ng school board na talamain dua (Sorry is all I can tell these mayors who misused the school boards' money)," De la Cruz said.

She warned the concerned mayors and town treasurers that she would identify them if they again failed to remit their obligations to the provincial government.

De la Cruz urged the provincial board to immediately pass a resolution penalizing the mayors and treasurers if they failed to remit the SEF shares.

She said the province would be forced to reduce the number of teachers it would hire contractual teachers next year.

Earlier, the governor said the provincial government could not release their Christmas bonuses because of the problem.

De la Cruz said even her promised increase of P2,000 in the Christmas bonuses of the more than 1,700 officials and employees at the provincial capitol was affected by the "financial anomaly." Carmela Reyes, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Mayor's backers protest ballot boxes' transfer

CABANATIAN CITY—Supporters of Mayor Nestor Alvarez of the Science City of Muñoz gathered in front of the city hall on Tuesday to protest a Commission on Elections order transferring to Metro Manila the ballot boxes bearing the returns of the mayoral election last May 10.

The returns are subject of an election protest filed by losing candidate Domiano Laurena Jr., who claimed that massive fraud and irregularities attended the election in that city. He asked the Comelec for a recount of votes.

Alvarez's supporters asked the Comelec to hold the hearings of the election protest and the recount of votes in Muñoz.

Despite the presence of protesters, all the 175 ballot boxes were, however, transported to Metro Manila on Tuesday morning without any untoward incident, said Senior Supt. Alex Paul Montegudo, Nueva Ecija police director.

He said the police and Comelec officials persuaded the protesters' leaders to allow them to implement the Comelec order.

Alvarez, in a radio interview, said the election in his city was held with out any irregularity.

He said he was the popular choice of the voters and this was the reason they elected him for his second term.

Alvarez won by more than 3,500 votes over Laurena.

The Comelec's second division in Manila will hear the case. Anselmo Roque, PDI Central Luzon Desk

DPWH to send heavy equipment to devastated areas in Quezon

LUCENA CITY—The Department of Public Works and Highways is all set to start the massive reconstruction of the road system in calamity-stricken areas of northern Quezon, perhaps the biggest road rehabilitation undertaking in recent memory.

Bonifacio Seguit, DPWH director for Southern Tagalog, led the DPWH officials in conferring with Armed Forces of the Philippines officials in the military's Southern Luzon Unified Command on how to bring the fleet of heavy equipment to northern Quezon, particularly in the devastated 20-kilometer portion of the road before reaching Real town.

"The reconstruction and clearing of the road along Real-Gen Nakar-Infanta area, including the Infanta pobacion, is much easier than the job that awaits us in the destroyed road before Real town," Seguit said.

He said the problem facing the deployment of heavy equipment is how to bring them to the area.

Only the ships that will carry the fleet of heavy equipment to be used in the Real-Infanta-Gen. Nakar area could use the Real Port, the DPWH official said.

According to Seguit, the equipment that will be used in the rehabilitation of destroyed bridges and roads will have to be disembarked in the target area.

He said the pieces of heavy equipment to be dispatched in the area could not use Real Port as entry point because the roads leading to the target area are also destroyed.

Seguit met with Maj. Gen. Pedro Cabuay, Solcom chief, officials of the Office of the Civil Defense and officials of the Provincial Disaster Coordinating Council led by Henry Buzar yesterday morning in Camp Nakar.

The group planned to use the old compound of the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. in Barangay Capalong in Real.

It was learned that the PLDT facility in the area has a docking area, aside from two helipads.

2 Pangasinan mayors see need for family planning

LINGAYEN, Pangasinan—While the national government is still ambivalent about population control, two mayors in eastern Pangasinan have seen the need for family planning and asked the provincial population and health offices to conduct tubal ligation among women in their towns.

San Manuel Mayor Salvador Perez even gave a half sack of rice and a bag of groceries to women who underwent the permanent family planning method on Nov. 25.

Asuncion Tuvera, San Manuel health officer, said Perez promised to give the women goats in January as part of the livelihood program he had initiated for them.

Twenty-nine women, aged 22 to 27 and who have two to seven children each, underwent bilateral tubal ligation procedure conducted by the Voluntary Sterilization Itinerant Team (VSIT) at the San Manuel infirmary last month.

The VSIT was composed of doctors, nurses and staff of the provincial population office and the provincial health office.

Tuvera said Perez earlier asked the municipal health office to conduct an information campaign on family planning methods among residents of the resettlement area in Mangaan Village.

Families displaced by the construction of the San Roque multipurpose dam live in the area.

In Asingan town, Mayor Guillermo Pico also asked the VSIT to conduct tubal ligation in his area because many barangay chairs had been asking him for money every time a resident went through voluntary sterilization services.

Some 30 women underwent the procedure at the Asingan Medicare Hospital on Nov. 18. The youngest patient was 24 years old (with two children), while the oldest was 41 years old (with seven children).

The VSIT reached 125 other women who underwent the procedure at the Dasol Community Hospital (20 women), Bolinao Medicare Hospital (31), Eastern Pangasinan District Hospital (49) and the Mangatarem District Hospital (25).

But the team, which was supposed to provide voluntary sterilization services to men, has yet to serve a single male patient, a member of the team said. Yolanda Sotelo-Fuentes, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

TYPHOON victims of Dingalan, Aurora retrieve logs washed away by flashflood. REN ZAMORA

'Don't blame kaingin for Dingalan disaster'

By Tonette Orejas
Dingalan, Aurora

FORMER logging firm employee Felipe Serna has developed a deep sense of fear whenever it rains. For this 65-year-old migrant from Ilocos Sur, rains have become the portents of the worst disasters in his lifetime.

Since arriving in Dingalan, Aurora in 1958, Serna, now a farmer, said he had never seen deadly landslides until two weeks ago when Typhoon "Violeta" and Tropical Depression "Winnie" battered the mountain town.

The death toll from floods and landslides caused by the two cyclones has climbed to 142. Hundreds more people are still missing and feared dead.

On Monday, after two days of respite from the strong rains and howling winds, Serna was restless.

With members of the Pinagkaisang Samahan ng Magbubukid sa Dingalan, Serna, chair of the group, stood at the banks of the Devil-Davilan River. The rains made them restless again, they said.

"We're trying to assess the damage to our farms," he said when the INQUIRER joined them at the seedling nursery of the Integrated Rural Development Foundation of the Philippines (IRDFP).

By farms, he meant those on the steep slopes covered by an Integrated Social Forestry (ISF) project of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources in Barangay Davil Davilan.

The area covers 127.41 hectares of land cultivated by 57 farmers under a 25-year stewardship contract with the DENR.

Serna recalled that the same area was part of the logging concession of Dingalan Forest Products Corp. He was employed there, starting in 1962, as an operator of "triple drum," an equipment used in hauling newly felled logs. He left the company in 1971 following a labor dispute that dragged for months.

This, Serna said, was the irony of their plight and what the successive disasters denied them.

Former loggers

"Some of us used to be loggers. Displaced from work, we turned to farming. When there were no more lands to till because every piece of land was controlled by the logging companies, we turned to the over-logged areas. Of course, that was with the consent of government. The lands are marginal but we've made them productive. What we have worked for years are gone," he said.

The slopes, he said, were planted with fruit trees and vegetables. He said they were into kaingin (slash-and-burn farming) to raise food and cash crops.

They also made charcoal, deriving the wood from branches of mature upi-upi trees.

He said it pained him to hear local officials blaming the kaingeros for the landslides that occurred in the town.

"We found that unfair. Our landlessness pushed us to the slopes. Those lands were previously exploited by the logging firms. The way we farmed was not destructive because those are the only lands we've got," Serna said.

The landslides, he said, were the belated effects of the decades-old rape of the forests in this part of the Sierra Madre mountain ranges.

Looking back, Serna said, the landslides triggered by Typhoon "Kading" in 1978 warned of the disasters that occurred recently.

It was also because of landlessness and the little income from fishing that pushed Nicanor Calulut to cultivate land within the DENR's ISF in Barangay Paltic. The project was established only in 1995.

The ISFs in Davil-Davilan and Paltic are within the Dingalan watershed area, the only one of nine declared with that status throughout the town.

Calulut earns from coconuts, bananas, mangoes and sweet potatoes in his farm.

What he is sure about, he said, was that even if Paltic is an ISF area, logging persisted.

"It's happening at the Madilim River. I saw cablon (lumber) floating there many times," he said.

Bonifacio Borja, a Paltic council member, confirmed this, saying the pieces of lumber were sold to Inter-Pacific Forest Resources Corp., which operates a sawmill in the village.

"There were pieces of lumber in Paltic. These were given free to the people when the media arrived. That way, they could hide the evidence of logging. There are mobile sawmills in Paltic," Borja said.

But amid all these, Serna's group is anticipating a nightmare (bangungot). It comes with the proposal of the Dingalan council to cancel even the stewardship contract which, he said, was a rather hard stance to protect what remained of the forests and the lives at the foothills of Mt. Mangan.

This was proposed after President Macapagal-Arroyo vowed to stop logging and start a massive reforestation drive.

'Fight to the end'

"We'll fight that to the end," said Serna. He said the plan would further impoverish the farmers and open more areas in the mountains for agriculture than for forestry.

Logging has not only led to landlessness. In Barangay Umray, it has bred agrarian disputes as well, said resident Juliet Nuñez.

In Sitio Iyapit, she said, the Certificates of Land Ownership Award given under the government's Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Program were not assurances of tenure.

The Dumagats and descendants of settlers, like her grandfather Aniceto Asurera, continue to challenge the ownership claim of Green Circle Properties Corp. over some 30,000 ha in the highlands of Umray.

"It has been a pattern of being ejected and then returning to fight again another round of ejection," Nuñez said.

Dumagats lament loss of forest, communities

By Tonette Orejas
PDI Central Luzon Desk

DINGALAN, Aurora—Braving the rains and treading along the rough coast of the Pacific Ocean, Dumagat couple Betty and Domingo Soler reached the poblacion at past 1 p.m. on Monday after seven hours of walking to tell of the horror that happened in their village Singawan, south of here.

"The situation's sad there. We lost our forests. And our farms are gone, covered by mud, buried by trees. I can't stand seeing what happened to Singawan," Betty said haltingly, sobbing as she retold the events following Typhoons "Violeta" and "Winnie."

They survived by rushing to the coast, diving to the sea and floating for hours. The Solers held on to coconut trunks. "Di ako nawalan ng tatag (I didn't lose my resolve)," Domingo said of his efforts to save his family.

At the municipal hall where the Solers and their two children Gilbert, 5, and Emily, 7, sought refuge upon arriving at the poblacion, they asked for food. They had been without food for two days.

At least 32 people from the Torres, Ritual, Ramos, Soler, Zamora and Calyo families had died from the landslides, Betty said. Her daughter Alone, 3, was swept away by the debris that rolled down the village.

Her accounts, the first to reach Mayor Jaime Ylarde, raised the death toll from the floods in Dingalan to 142.

"We came down because there's no more food in the village. No relief has reached us," Betty said.

Ariel Salcedo, barangay captain of the coastal village of Dikapanluan, also rushed to the town proper on Monday to seek food aid from the municipal government.

"We don't want to rely on relief goods but we can't farm now. The farms are gone and so are the fruit trees," Salcedo, a Dumagat, told the INQUIRER.

Those in Barangay Matawe, like Marilyn Dayta, had also been leaving their village to get food assistance. "Relief goods are not reaching us," she said.

Panic again

After two days of sunshine, rains over Dingalan on Monday sent the residents into panic, said Ylarde. But he also took that to mean that the town's 22,000 residents were prepared for the eventuality of another bout with calamity.

The four evacuation centers—the elementary and high school buildings, the municipal hall and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources office—were brimming again with more than 6,000 people on Monday.

As the centers begin to be full again, the pressure of feeding the families, whether in centers or in their homes, are growing bigger.

"The relief goods are not enough for everybody," Ylarde said, adding that the Department of Social Welfare and Development alone distributed 77 sacks of rice daily in the centers.

Sad Christmas

Ronnie Ramirez, 23, an evacuee at the municipal hall, said he was not thinking of Christmas anymore.

"It's going to be a sad Christmas," he said, as he cooked a lunch of lugaw (rice porridge).

That's going to be so because nothing remained of his house, not even a trace. He built it on his income from fishing. The house was on a hill next to the sawmill of the Inter-Pacific Forest Resources Corp. in Barangay Paluc.

His only hope now, he said, was his wife Judith who works as a househelp in Cabanatuan City.

As the municipal government continued to recover bodies on the third week of the disaster, Ylarde said he was more worried about the safety and health of the living.

"My town stinks now," he said, adding that several bodies had been buried in mass graves.

The Naagas and Puyupuy families met this fate. "There was permission from their relatives," he said of the decision to bury the dead in mass graves.

Soler said the Dumagats, members of the Negrito tribe who considered the Sierra Madre mountain ranges their ancestral domain, cannot perform rituals for their dead tribesfolk for now. "We will return for sure to do that," she said.

As the resources of the municipal government thinned out, Ylarde said Dingalan now relies on outside help.

Pampanga Provincial Board Member Isita Pineda is scheduled to distribute food aid on Tuesday. Cadets of the Philippine Military Academy in Baguio City were coming also on Tuesday to bring relief goods to remote, isolated areas like Umitay.

Gabaldon, a Nueva Ecija town near the border of Dingalan, was itself in shambles, also the victim of a series of landslides. At the church in Barangay Sawmill where thousands flocked to receive relief goods, the Diocese of Nueva Ecija put up a streamer that said: "Babalang Atung Inang Kalikasan, Dingalan (Listen to the warning of Mother Nature)."

Negros increases funds for forest protection

By Carla Gomez
PDI Visayas Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—The Negros Occidental provincial government is raising its budget for reforestation and forest protection by 200 percent in a bid to increase its remaining forest cover.

Gov. Joseph Marañon on Monday said the move was in line with the call for government to take serious action to protect the remaining forests following recent floods and landslides brought on by two storms that hit Luzon that left 1,400 dead and missing.

Bacolod Bishop Vicente Navarra on Sunday appealed to government officials not to pay lip service with its pledge to act against forests destruction in the wake of the Luzon tragedy.

"Government must seriously address the problem of forest destruction and not wait until it is too late," he said.

The provincial government will increase the budget for forest protection and reforestation from P10 million this year to P30 million in 2005, Marañon said.

Part of the funds, he said, will be used to reforest the Negros Forest Reserve (NFR) in the cities of Victorias, Talisay and Silay and Murcia town located in central and northern Negros.

He said the forest cover has gone down over the years from 80,000 hectares to 16,000 hectares mainly due to illegal logging and poaching in the past.

Deal signed to study P150-M coal power plant

By Nestor P. Burgos Jr.
PDI Visayas Bureau

ILOILO CITY—The DMCI Holdings Inc. (DMCI-HI) and the municipal government of Concepcion in Iloilo on Tuesday signed a memorandum of agreement to conduct studies on the construction of a P150-million coal-fired power plant in the municipality.

The four-page agreement, signed by Concepcion Mayor Raul Banas and DMCI-HI president Isidro Consunji, authorizes DMCI-HI to conduct feasibility studies, information campaigns and other measures necessary to secure government permits and clearances for the project.

The DMCI-HI and its subsidiary, the Semurara Mining Corp., are proposing to put up a 100-megawatt coal-fired plant in a 30-hectare area Barangay Nipa, a coastal village 5 km from the town proper. Concepcion is 111 km north of Iloilo City.

Government officials led by Senate President Franklin Drilon and Energy Secretary Vincent Perez are pushing the project to resolve the power supply deficit of Panay Island.

"We have been doing a lot of stop-gap measures for Panay but it has an unstable power supply for one large island," said Perez during a recent power summit here. He cited the island's dependence on temporary and imported sources of energy.

Drilon said Western Visayas could not take advantage of potential growth brought by the opening of the Iloilo International airport in 2006 if the power supply of Panay remains unstable.

The current peak power demand in Panay is already equal to the dependable capacity of 206 mw generated by seven power plants on the island, said Pio Benavidez, National Power Corp. (Napocor) senior vice president for operations.

He said the peak would increase to 248 mw by 2007, surpassing by 16 mw the expected dependable capacity of the plants during that year if the coal-fired plant is not constructed.

Benavidez said the putting up of an additional base load capacity in Panay is imperative due to the increasing power demand of Negros Island, which exports power to Panay.

Panay is at the tail end of the Visayas power grid, which gets the bulk of its supply from geothermal plants in Leyte.

The power demand in Panay is expected to increase by 7.8 percent annually, one of the fastest growth rates among regions, according to data of the Napocor and Department of Energy.

But an alliance of Concepcion residents and non-government organizations are opposing the project out of fear that it will cause pollution and environmental hazards.

Marija Querubin, convenor of the Concepcion Alliance for Renewable Energy (Coal-Free), said many of their townmates are unaware of the hazards of coal-fired plants.

"They think it's just like charcoal which they find harmless," she said.

Running priest finds new cause in ecology

STA. CRUZ, Laguna—Running priest Fr. Robert Reyes is now fighting for a total log and mining ban and has asked politicians, including President Macapagal-Arroyo, not to sacrifice the environment to raise funds.

Reyes, who was in Laguna yesterday for a visit, said the solution to massive ecological destruction should not be "partial and compartmentalized."

"The solution to preserv(ing) our nature should be comprehensive and total," he said.

Reyes said Ms. Arroyo's total log ban declaration was mere rhetoric and distracting, as she in fact approved of mining in the country.

"Total log ban and a mining ban are inseparable because you can't mine without destroying, cutting and clearing our trees and mines are found in the mountains," he said.

Reyes said what is needed in the country today is total moratorium on cutting of trees and mining activities.

"We cannot do one and avoid the other. Our environment today is like a patient with two sicknesses. It needs total medical attention. We cannot just cure one sickness and leave the other sickness unattended lest the whole person suffers," he said.

The activist priest appealed to politicians to stop depending on loans and aids from financial institutions like the World Bank.

"Let us not offer our mountains and environment as collateral because these can't be redeemed anymore. Once the environment is destroyed, it can no longer be reversed," Reyes said.

"Government should not be investing on short-term projects with short-term benefits but with fatal, long-term disastrous consequences," he said.

"If we destroy our environment now, the future generation will no longer have mountains to preserve, nature to enjoy and environment to relish."

Reyes said environmental destruction is no longer a legal issue but a moral one because "we have not obeyed God's mandate to take care of the earth."

"God wants us to protect and preserve it for all generations to make use of and enjoy," he added. Romulo Ponte, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Int'l antiwar activists urge coverage of efforts for peace

DAVAO CITY—Groups critical of the US war against terror are equally critical of how the media have been covering stories, saying much of what is happening in the world has been left unreported.

David Wildman of the US-based United Methodist Church, claimed that in the recent US elections, a huge number of Black Americans were unable to vote because of fraud but this remained unreported in the media, just as the growing sentiment against the US war on Iraq was being left out in the news.

"The media can be an unwitting tool for empire," said Prof. Maake Masango of South Africa, a member of the executive committee of the World Council of Churches.

By empire, he said that he meant how the US is trying to assert dominance in political, economic and military affairs of world.

Masango said that the US antiterror war has taken the "discourse" of the battle of good against evil, "demonizing the Muslims and those who fight for peace."

That's why, he said, it is important for various faiths all over the world to cut through their language, to tell the world that the war against Iraq and Afghanistan are "not God's will and to stand in brotherhood with all faiths of the world."

"It's important for us to reject the media's incorrect portrayals of Muslims as 'terrorists,' and to tell stories of peace that will inspire the world," Masango told reporters during the concluding ceremony of the first People's Forum on Peace for Life held here.

Over 300 people from all various countries attended the summit, which started last week.

Masango said that the suffering of people in Mindanao is another face of the US war of aggression and that the international community needs to know what is happening here.

But he said this can only be done if things get reported in the media.

"We, in South Africa can learn only about what is happening in Mindanao through you, so, I hope, you will participate in this role. Please, don't fail your own people," Masango said addressing the media. Germina Lacorte, PDI Mindanao Bureau Another Filipino member of the consulate staff, supplies office supervisor Wenceslao Pescante, was among the 13 wounded. The 56-year-old from Makati City was hit by a stray bullet in the knee while entering the gate of the consulate during the attack, officials said. (See related stories on A10 and A23.)

"They told the security forces in front of us: 'We have hostages. If you approach, we will shoot,'" Muafza Jilan Ibrahim, a Yemeni maintenance worker who had superficial bullet wounds told Reuters, recalling the attack.

Human shields

"They put us in front of them as human shields. The security forces stormed in and there was an exchange of fire," Ibrahim added.

Witnesses said the militants had hauled down the US flag and burned it after bursting into the mission.

US President George W. Bush said the attack showed "terrorists are still on the move," trying to intimidate Americans and force the United States to withdraw from Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

"This is the evil of terrorism," Foreign Undersecretary Jose Brillantes said.

De la Rosa, one of more than 700,000 Filipinos working in Saudi Arabia, had been living in Jeddah with his wife Jeanne and a daughter, according to Consul General Pen-dosina N. Lomondot.

Pescante due for surgery

"The Philippine Consulate is already in touch with Mr. De la Rosa's bereaved family in Jeddah for whatever assistance they may require," Department of Foreign Affairs spokesperson Gilberto Asuque said in Manila.

Pescante suffered "non-life threatening injuries" on his knee, elbow and pelvis and was brought to the Dr. Soliman Fakeeh Hospital across the consulate, Asuque said.

He was subjected to an X-ray exam and was to undergo an operation to extract the bullet embedded in his knee. Consular officials could not visit him because the area around the consulate, which covers the hospital, had been cordoned off.

De la Rosa and Pescante were among three Filipinos working at the consulate.

Lomondot advised the hundreds of Filipinos working at the Dr. Soliman Fakeeh Hospital "to restrict their movements" and stay within the hospital as much as possible.

Al-Qaida ally

"The squadron of the martyr Abu Annas al-Shami carried out the blessed Pailuya attack by storming one of the bastions of the crusaders in the Arabian Peninsula and penetrated the American consulate in Jeddah," the al-Qaida Organization in the Arabian Peninsula said in a statement posted on a website often used by Islamists. Its authenticity could not be verified.

Islamic 'deviants'

The bloodshed in the Red Sea port city indicated that the fight against Saudi-born Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida network in the kingdom was far from over despite a security crackdown in which several leading militants had been killed or captured.

The Saudi interior ministry said security forces killed three attackers and a fourth died from his wounds. They captured a wounded member of the "deviant" group—which is what the government calls al-Qaida.

It said the five dead consulate employees, besides De la Rosa, were a Yemeni, a Sudanese, a Pakistani and a Sri Lankan.

Adel al-Jubeir, foreign affairs adviser to Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Abdullah, told reporters the five attackers approached the gate in two vehicles and when the first vehicle was stopped at an outside checkpoint, they got out and fought their way into the compound firing guns and lobbing grenades.

Birthplace of 9-11 hijackers

He said the attackers called a general emergency line to say they had taken 17 hostages and that security forces should not attack the compound to rescue them. After coordinating with US Marines providing security to the consulate, Saudi forces stormed the compound and rescued some hostages, he added.

Saudi Arabia was the birthplace of most of the hijackers who carried out the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks in the United States.

In the kingdom's last big attack, militants struck at oil companies and a housing compound in the eastern city of Khobar in May. At least 22 foreigners and seven security men died.

Saudi Arabia has been battling a wave of al-Qaida violence since May 2003. Around 170 people, including foreigners, security forces and militants have been killed.

US officials said the assault prompted an investigation into how the assailants were able to breach security to enter the compound.

"It's quite clear that those terrorists who attacked our consulate in Jeddah had observed our procedures for some time," US Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage said.

DOLE seeks policy review

ACTING Labor Secretary Manuel Imson told a Senate finance committee hearing on the 2005 budget that the spate of terrorism-related incidents involving Filipinos abroad would trigger a review by the government aimed at ensuring the safety of overseas workers.

Imson told reporters the policy review would not mean there would be a suspension or a ban on the deployment of Filipinos abroad.

"What we're saying is there should be certain programs that should make our workers a little more aware of security measures," he said.

There is a need to reiterate and enhance existing security measures for them, according to the acting labor secretary.

Senate finance committee chair Manuel Villar stressed the need for government to review its foreign policy in the wake of violent incidents involving Filipinos abroad.

Villar said at the hearing that there seemed to be a trend of Filipinos getting hurt or killed abroad in the face of Philippine support for the US war against terrorism.

"We should review our foreign policy on Iraq and in the Middle East," he said.

Poll shames solons on pork

ing the abolition of the pork barrel, claiming that it is a source of kickbacks for members of Congress.

De Dios said "79 percent of respondents believe that half or more of the budget of a project or program of a legislator goes to corruption."

But Rep. Douglas Cagas (NPC, Davao del Sur) had said the pork barrel was nothing to be ashamed of.

"Go to our provinces and the people themselves will say that it (pork) is something good," he said, after the House of Representatives decided last month to retain the full P70 million in pork barrel for each legislator.

Malacañang had cut by 40 percent to P40 million the pork barrel of each member of the House and to P120 million the pork barrel of each senator in the proposed national budget of P907.6 billion for next year.

The proposed cuts, which would have saved almost P10 billion, were part of the administration's effort to keep the budget deficit manageable to avert a full-blown fiscal crisis.

Response to fiscal woes

The respondents believed that President Macapagal-Arroyo had botched her job of convincing the public that her package of economic reforms was the answer to the fiscal and debt problems.

Pulse Asia said 63 percent of the respondents felt the President had no adequate government response to the fiscal and debt woes—35 percent said government did not have effective programs and 28 percent could not say one way or the other.

The polling group said only 37 percent of Filipinos agreed with the statement: "The government has effective programs to address the fiscal and debt crisis."

"These results suggest that if the government indeed has a plan of action for dealing with the crisis, then either this plan is still not generally known, or the people doubt its effectiveness or the government's will to implement it," De Dios said.

Cause for concern

He said another cause for concern of the government was the high number of skeptics in Metro Manila (48 percent) of those belonging to the middle-to upper-class groups (43 percent).

"These sections of the population are already among those who have better access to information or have the motivation to acquire it, yet they express an even lower rate of positive agreement that the government's programs are effective," he said.

But while Filipinos have serious doubts on the fiscal reform package, the Pulse Asia survey showed that they support three of the administration's major policy reforms—increasing taxes on cigarettes and alcohol products, abolishing the pork barrel of Congress,

THE PEOPLE have spoken. Will there be order in the House and will the people's representatives finally listen?

Pulse Asia found that 82 percent of the respondents "overwhelmingly" supported an increase in sin taxes with 50 percent favoring a more uniform tax treatment of sin products, whether these be high- or low-priced cigarettes or alcohol.

"The pattern of the responses suggests that Filipinos generally tend to view the issue of smoking and drinking less as a private financial issue for themselves and more as a public health concern," said De Dios, one of the 11 professors at the University of the Philippines School of Economics, who warned in August of an economic collapse in two years' time unless the government reined in the budget deficit and debt.

Tax amnesty

On a tax amnesty, the survey showed only a slight majority, or 54 percent, favored forgiving tax evaders largely because it would minimize extortion by revenue agents.

Pulse Asia said the Cabinet was still in disarray ("They could not speak with unanimity on the gravity and consequences of the crisis, and had not yet committed itself to a coherent package of measures") and Congress waffled on the reform package ("It still had to pass a single measure directly in response to the crisis").

A parallel survey conducted by Pulse Asia during the same period showed the President getting a record low rating of 7 percent due to the public's dismay over her mishandling of rising prices.

Gov't's credibility

Pulse Asia noted further that the survey was made weeks before the President had declared the fiscal crisis was over.

"Whether and by how much the President's subsequent self reversal was likely to have further affected the credibility of the government's efforts to address the crisis cannot be known from this survey," De Dios said. Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

High fuel, power rates push inflation rate to 7.6%

shoot up this month because of the recent typhoons.

Pressures from Christmas spending will also likely contribute to a much higher inflation for December, according to analysts.

But for Trade Secretary Cesar Purisima, the prices of goods are "reasonable" following the calamities that struck the country.

"Based on our analysis, given that commodity prices have substantially increased abroad, we believe that the local price situation is reasonable," Purisima told reporters after attending a briefing on the Department of Trade and Industry's budget proposal for next year at the Senate.

Monetary tightening

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas hinted it would resort to monetary tightening in the near future to arrest the surge in consumer prices.

BSP Governor Rafael Buenaventura acknowledged that the pressure to raise interest rates was escalating. "It's creeping in now. But if Dubai oil prices slow down to $30 per barrel, hopefully the pressures will abate," he said at a press briefing.

The inflation rate of 7.6 percent for November (using 1994 as the base year) was 0.5 percentage point higher than the 7.1 percent recorded the previous month, the NSO said. (Inflation for November was at 8.2 percent using the year 2000 as the base.)

Utilities up 12.5 percent

The NSO said the surge in inflation last month was largely due to the 12.5-percent increase in the cost of fuel, light and water, compared with the 10.4 percent in October.

"The 98-centavo increase in the generation charge of National Power Corp. that took effect in November pushed electricity prices to 13.4 percent. Fuel prices also rose as oil refiners and importers passed on the increase in Dubai oil price from $35.55 per barrel in September to $37.54 per barrel in October," Romulo Neri, director general of the National Economic and Development Authority, said in a statement.

The cost of services also jumped in November, rising 12.5 percent from the previous month's 12 percent. Inflation for miscellaneous items rose 2.7 percent from 2.5 percent.

The NSO said the inflation for food, beverage and tobacco as a group stood at 7.1 percent, slightly lower than the 7.2 percent the previous month.

PURISIMA: The local price situation is reasonable.

For food, the inflation rate decelerated to 7.2 percent from the previous 7.5 percent.

Prices of corn went up 10.3 percent; eggs, 6.3 percent; fruits and vegetables, 5.7 percent; meat, 14.2 percent; rice, 3.5 percent; cereal preparations, 6.8 percent; dairy products, 9.7 percent; and miscellaneous food, 5.4 percent.

Imports

Scholastica Cororaton, head of Neda's policy and planning division, said the inflation rate for December was expected to reach at least 8 percent due to the effects of the typhoons.

She said the typhoons were expected to push up the prices of food products, particularly of vegetables.

Cororaton recommended that the government resort to the importation of agriculture products to ease the effects of the typhoons on prices of domestic food items.

Consumer prices still going up

She said consumer prices could still go up in the early part of next year because of another round of increases in electricity rates. Napocor, which recently increased its generation rate by 98 centavos per kilowatt-hour, is expected to be granted another rate increase early next year.

The continued rise in inflation prompted the government to say that its original target of 4 percent to 5 percent for the full year would no longer be achievable. The full-year inflation rate is expected to hit 5.5 to 5.7 percent.

Toll hike in major expressways by Jan. 1

By Clarissa S. Batino

MOTORISTS using the South Luzon Express (SLEX), Skyway and Coastal Road would have to shoulder hefty increases in toll rates effective Jan. 1.

The rates would go up by as much as P10, following the approval of the new fees last week by the Toll Regulatory Board (TRB) for the use of the three major expressways.

The TRB said the toll along the North Luzon Expressway (NLEX) would remain unchanged until the Lopez-led Manila North Tollways Corp. (MNTC) submits its petition for new rates shortly before it takes over operations from the Philippine National Construction Corp.

The MNTC had said that the rates along the NLEX could go up by about 380 percent once it takes over early next year, to allow the private group to recover its $371 million investment and to pay its creditors.

The toll would go up by P10 along the Skyway, an elevated and ground level highway, and P3 along Coastal Road. But the increases would double for vans and buses, and three times more for trucks.

Along the 30-kilometer SLEX, the toll per kilometer would go up by 4 centavos to 56 centavos per kilometer for cars and jeeps, P1.12 for vans and buses, and P1.68 for trucks.

The SLEX is classified as a closed highway where the rates are determined by every kilometer traveled.

On the other hand, the Skyway and Coastal Road are open highways that impose a flat toll rate for each class of vehicle.

Close to half a million motorists that use the SLEX, Skyway and Coastal Road would be affected by the increase. The TRB said it would issue a public notice of the new rates before Christmas.

"The TRB thinks the toll hikes are reasonable," said Transport Undersecretary Arturo Valdez. "Toll operators are allowed to increase the rates each year as provided for in their Supplemental Tollway Operation Agreement."

JEDDAH BOMBING AFTERMATH

Metro under guard

By Christian V. Esguerra, Leila B. Salaverria and Margaux C. Ortiz

THE POLICE are not taking any chances.

Amidst to prevent an attack similar to that on the United States consulate in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, the National Police has moved to fortify Metro Manila, particularly embassies. (See related story on Page A1.)

In a two-page letter of instruction, PNP chief Director General Edgar Aglipay activated "Task Force Manila Shield," a top-level defense setup aimed at keeping the metropolis safe from terrorist attacks.

Shield

Under the setup, police forces in neighboring provinces will act as a shield and aid the National Capital Region Police Office in case of attacks.

"The idea is to have a force to protect the back of the NCRPO while it's doing its job in Metro Manila," Aglipay told the INQUIRER yesterday.

The Manila Shield will be under the command of the NCRPO's chief of staff, a police colonel who will direct the actions of all provincial police districts on the peripheries of the National Capital Region.

The team includes the Special Action Force, an elite PNP unit which Aglipay also formerly headed.

Criminals, too

Part of Manila Shield's goal is to prevent criminal elements from slipping into Metro Manila.

Security was particularly tightened around the already fortress-like US Embassy on Roxas Boulevard in Manila.

"There have been no specific threats against the US embassy here in Manila, but the attack in Jeddah has made the terrorist threat very real," said Sr. Supt. Juanito de Guzman, Western Police District (WPD) deputy for administration.

Apart from the US Embassy, the WPD sent out additional special operatives, beat patrol members and plainclothes policemen to guard vital installations in Manila like the Malacañang and the Pandacan Oil Depot.

De Guzman said that undercover policemen had been deployed to the Manila Baywalk, a strip of Roxas Boulevard that has become a popular destination for promenaders.

Attention on Baywalk

He said the stretch of the Baywalk from the US Embassy to Padre Faura Street would be receiving utmost attention.

Also, people loitering near the US Embassy would be closely watched.

De Guzman said passing in front of or near the embassy would be all right, but stopping would surely draw the attention of security forces.

No pictures, please

He added that taking pictures of the embassy would be highly suspect.

Checkpoints have been set up on the approach of security sensitive areas like the US Embassy.

Strict security measures have also been set up in the Makati City area, where the police estimate hosted 90 percent of embassies and consulates in the country.

Chief Supt. Wilfredo Garcia, Southern Police District director, said 500 of the district's 3,000 policemen had been assigned to secure these foreign offices.

"So far, there haven't been any threats against the embassies," Garcia said. "But we are prepared."

Makati cops to go on bike patrol

By Margaux C. Ortiz

POLICEMEN on bicycle patrol will soon be a familiar sight in Makati's Central Business District.

The National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO) yesterday launched the Southern Police District's bike patrol program in an effort to increase police visibility in the country's premier financial district.

"This is in line with the NCRPO's integrated police visibility program," Razon told reporters.

"With the program, people will be assured that the police are always around to protect them," he added.

Razon said 10 policemen on mountain bikes would initially be deployed to the Central Business District.

Wearing shorts and T-shirts, the policemen would be doing the rounds during the daytime.

"They would patrol the financial district in teams so they would not be vulnerable to attack," Razon said, stressing that the policemen should carry their service firearms and communication radios at all times.

Apart from being "environmentally friendly," the police force would also save on gas with the project, the NCRPO chief said.

"Our men would also get to exercise all the time, making them physically fit to do their jobs," he added.

Bike patrols would soon be launched in the Ayala-Alabang business and commercial area in Muntinlupa, Global City in Taguig, and Roxas Boulevard in Pasay City.

Ayala Bridge now open to motorists

By Tarra V. Quismundo

AFTER closing its eastbound lane to motorists, Ayala Bridge, one of Manila's main bridges, is now open to motorists traveling to and from Taft Avenue to the Malacañang and Legarda areas.

The Department of Public Works and Highways said yesterday that it had finished major repairs on one side of the 140-meter bridge, and opened the closed portion ahead of schedule.

"Our program was for 45 days, but we finished it in 26 days since it is a critical bridge and is used by VIPs," said project engineer Eduardo Santos of the DPWH National Capital Region Maintenance Division.

The pre-World War II bridge, which was last repaired in 1946, is a major link connecting the Ermita and San Miguel districts.

It is also used by vehicles bound for Malacañang and other government offices, including the Department of Budget Management, among others.

The project, which required extended work hours from DPWH personnel, was wrapped up just before Typhoon Yoyong hit the country last week, raising storm signal No. 3 over Metro Manila.

The P3 million project involved replacing steel bars and concrete holding the building to the ground, a portion of which was damaged by weather and barges passing through the Pasig River.

The project had been two years overdue because of lack of funds.

With the repairs, the bridge's eastbound portion would be good for at least 20 years as the DPWH would ensure its safety with quarterly inspections every year, Santos added.

Repairs on the opposite side of the bridge, where steel bars had been corroded and the concrete already severely damaged through wear and tear, would begin early next year.

"We may schedule it after school closes to spare the public from the inconvenience and the traffic problems it could cause," Santos said.

Sexy star's husband in brawl

By Tina G. Santos

THE HUSBAND of the late sexy actress Halina Perez filed a complaint before the police in Quezon City after he was allegedly mauled by a nightclub customer yesterday morning.

In his complaint, Anthony Cuevas, 26, of Chico Street, Project 3, who is also a former varsity player of National University, accused a certain Allan Salvador of punching him and hitting him with a beer bottle.

Police said the incident occurred at about 3 a.m. in front of Decade's bar on Rocas Avenue, Barangay Laging Handa, Quezon City.

Cuevas claimed that Salvador attacked him as he was on his way out of the bar. Before the incident, Salvador reportedly tried to blame Cuevas for the scratch on the former's Ford Explorer, which was parked in front of the pub.

Trouble reportedly erupted when Cuevas denied the accusation of Salvador.

Why are we offering this authentic Statue Of The Virgin In A Dome Immersed In The Miraculous Water Of Lourdes?

If you have one or more wishes you would like to come true quickly, read the following, before it's too late:

During my first trip to Europe, I was amazed to see how many people said these surprising stories of the Virgin. But what surprised me most was that this statue — made in Lourdes, France — is covered by a clear dome FILLED WITH THE MIRACULOUS WATER OF LOURDES.

The first question that came to mind was: "Just why do so many people have this statue of the Virgin immersed in the Miraculous Waters of Lourdes?"

I immediately went to Lourdes to find out. When I discovered there is amazing.

It is no surprise that for more than a century, two million pilgrims have been traveling annually to Lourdes to be close to these waters with their limitless powers. And some of these individuals even manage to bring back some of the Miraculous Water of Lourdes with them.

Consequently, it is no surprise the value of this statue and the Miraculous Water in which it is immersed is astronomical. What's more, the source of Lourdes Water is small and the demand for its water is worldwide.

If you have any wishes you want to come true quickly, order your statue of the Virgin immersed in the Miraculous Water of Lourdes. A contribution of only P299 is requested per statue to cover its transportation expense.

As president of the Lourdes Research Organization, I was able to receive one of these statues, just fill in and mail the coupon below to the indicated address. We ask a mere contribution of P299 per statue to cover its transportation costs, air freight charges, insurance and customs handling.

Unfortunately, we probably will not be able to meet all requests. To benefit from this very special offer, please sign the document appearing on the coupon. By doing so you agree to send us a brief letter about the fortunate and miraculous events you experience daily, to the powers of the Miraculous Waters of Lourdes surrounding your statue.

President, Lourdes Research Organization

Welcoat deflects late Toyota run

By Jasmine W. Payo

MAGNOLIA-FEU rode on the big games of its veterans to repulse Granny Goose, 72-62, and claim the leadership of the PBL Open Championship yesterday at the Makati Coliseum.

Arwind Santos, who finished with 12 points and four blocks, triggered a fourth quarter run for the Wizards and then helped ward off a late rally by the Torillos to put his team in first place with a 7-3 record.

RJ Ruzada topscored with 15 points while Warren Ybañez added 14 for Magnolia-FEU, which has now won five straight.

"We executed very well especially on defense," said coach Roy Banal after the Wizards avenged its 68-64 first-round loss to the Torillos.

"We didn't know their key players like (Dennis) Concha, (Jet) Latonio and (Arty) Larong. But this time, napag-aralan na namin sila. (We were able to study them)."

Granny Goose slipped to third at 6-3, half a game behind idle Montaña's second-rounding 6-2 slate.

Earlier, Welcoat Palms nearly threw away a double-digit lead before holding on for a 75-68 victory over Toyota Otis-Letran.

"In order for us to make it to the top four, we have to beat Toyota and Atenes," said coach Caloy Garcia after Welcoat remained at fourth place with a 5-4 record.

Toyota Otis-Letran fell to fifth place at 4-6.

Dennis Miranda kept Magnolia-FEU afloat and a Santos triple later gave the defending champions a 59-49 margin early in the fourth.

The Torillos gradually sliced the lead to 63-59, four minutes remaining. But Santos and Ruzada cooled the rally down the stretch.

BOXING CLINIC

Roach feels honored

ROACH: I hope my humble efforts would help in the discovery of future champs.

FAMOUS American boxing trainer Freddie Roach yesterday said he was very thankful and honored for the chance to be of help to Philippine boxing.

Roach, trainer of the year for 2003, starts a two-day clinic at the Ninoy Aquino Stadium inside the Rizal Memorial Sports Complex this morning.

The clinic, offered free to the public, was organized by lawyer-sportsman Rudy Salud with the sponsorship of the Philippine Sportswriters Association and support from the Philippine Sports Commission.

Today's session, from 8 a.m. to 12 noon, will consist of a lecture and the question-answer portion.

Day 2 tomorrow will center on actual demonstrations of solutions to problems raised by clinic participants on the first day.

"I know there are many other future world champions waiting out there," Roach said.

"I hope my humble efforts would help in their discovery and development."

Sports nutritionist Sanrose Orbeta will also talk on the proper diet for boxers in today's session.

PACQUIAO (right) and Fahsan strike a pose during the press preview of their fight at the Wild Card Gym in Parañaque.

Fahsan belittles Pacquiao's form

By Recah Trinidad

AN AWFUL underdog, Fahsan 3K Battery yesterday saw something strange in Manny Pacquiao's body.

It flashed as a ray of hope that said the Filipino ring idol could be beaten.

Fahsan, 30, relied on keen native sense, handed down to him by his poor farmer folks from southern Thailand, to read into Pacquiao's physique.

Fahsan told the INQUIRER through his English-speaking manager that Pacquiao is not in peak form.

"We are hundred-percent sure he (Pacquiao) is not in the best condition," explained Jimmy Chachotochuang, Fahsan's manager.

Chachotochuang said this information was relayed to him by Fahsan after his fighter had intently observed Pacquiao limbering on the floor after working with the punch mitts at the Wild Card Gym in Parañaque.

Fahsan explained that he noticed the physical imperfection through the uneven trickling of sweat from Pacquiao's muscular body.

"He just swear something was wrong," Chachotochuang explained.

The Thai manager, however, was quick to concede that Pacquiao enjoys an enormous edge in speed and power.

But he said Pacquiao could indeed be unbearable if he's coming in on Saturday in the same condition he had when he fought Juan Manuel Marquez last May.

"I think Pacquiao, at best, is only 80 percent," Fahsan's manager said.

And how prepared is Fahsan himself? "A hundred and 10 percent," he quipped confidently.

He bragged, for example, that Fahsan had completed a total 90 rounds of sparring in two months.

Pacquiao totaled 76 rounds of sparring in less than two months.

The Thai camp added that they had followed Pacquiao's training through local reports on the Internet.

"At best, he had thorough training for only three weeks, and that's very insufficient," the Thai fight manager said.

Fahsan butted in and mumbled something in Thai.

Translated, Pacquiao's foe said it would be wrong for the RP boxing hero to underestimate him.

Freddie Roach, Pacquiao's trainer, however, insisted his fighter would be 100 percent come Saturday night.

Thai shift points to interesting mismatch

TELEVISION people, who invested heavily on Saturday's big fight in Taguig, know it could be over in a snap.

A mismatch would be hard to avoid.

Promoters, organizers, together with advertisers, are bound to lose money.

But is Manny Pacquiao to blame?

He could indeed come over-prepared for his obscure Thai foe with the ring name Fahsan 3K Battery.

The Thai, portrayed as a devourer of Pinoy boxers, may have trained twice as hard as Pacquiao.

But he gets a chance to turn Philippine boxing on its head only if Pacquiao, a billiards addict, had again spent many late nights in the pool parlor.

But that did not happen.

Pacquiao did go out to play pool, but he did so only once during the final phase of his rigid training.

This was bared by Freddie Roach, the famous trainer who molded Pacquiao into a world boxing sensation.

In that single night out, Roach said his fighter returned early and was in bed before 10 p.m.

Roach said the sensation from GenSan would be at his best on fight night.

This Roach claim, naturally, further fueled speculations that the "Yanig sa Taguig" mainer would be a mismatch.

In fact, there were those who advised that Pacquiao should've not been made to fight if he could not get a worthy opponent.

These same people also wondered why fans would be forced to watch a tasteless bout.

Funny, but among those called to task was lawyer-sportsman Rudy Salud, who has gotten out of his way to drum up support for the Pacquiao fight at The Fort in Taguig on Saturday.

For coming to the aid of the promoters, Salud had been criticized.

Salud had to again explain that, in the case of Pacquiao, a mismatch could not be avoided at this point in the fighter's career.

Why? With Pacquiao's superb condition, Salud said only three or four fighters in his class, like Marquez, Morales and Barrera, could provide an apt challenge to the Filipino ring celebrity.

All others would pale in comparison.

If there's anybody to blame, it's Pacquiao himself for being that good, Salud quipped.

BARE EYE

Recah Trinidad

Local fight fans are busy placing a bet in which round Fahsan would be knocked out

"Pacquiao has become such a super athlete that anyone outside of the elite featherweight circle would pale in comparison," Salud explained.

As things stand, Salud said Saturday's outing for Pacquiao was the best promoters could offer local fight fans under the situation.

At least, Pacquiao will have to stay at peak form, and this should help immeasurably in his scheduled rematch against Mexican double world featherweight champ Juan Manuel Marquez next February.

In the case of the Thai visitor, local fight fans are busy placing a bet in which round he would be knocked out.

Well, Fahsan will indeed come in as an awful underdog, but it's too early to count him out.

For the record, the Thai camp had been quoted earlier that Fahsan would run in the first four rounds.

Fahsan's handlers had said the Thai would not bang it up promptly with Pacquiao.

They said Fahsan would first wait for exhaustion to set in before their fighter starts to tear at his foe.

But this was bared before Fahsan, who was in Manila earlier, returned for yesterday's press preview at the Wild Card Gym in Parañaque.

In a startling twist, the Thai camp told the INQUIRER they are shelving that mutual plot.

Fahsan, after sensing something wrong with Pacquiao's conditioning, has decided to bang it up, meet his foe head on, right at the first bell.

This sudden shift alone points to a very interesting mismatch.

UST tossers pin first loss on Lady Legends

By Musong R. Castillo

SANTO Tomas was pushed to the limit before dealing the PSC Lady Legends their first loss yesterday in the Shakey's V-League eliminations at the Rizal Coliseum.

Roxanne Pimentel stood at the vanguard of the Tigresses' assault as UST pulled off a five-set escape, 18-25, 25-16, 17-25, 25-14, 15-9.

The 5-foot-10 Pimentel found ways to crack the defense obviously focused on her and still got away with 24 points as the Tigresses won the marathon two-hour match for a 3-0 card and the solo lead.

The defending champions came back from a first-set loss and scored the win by winning the last two with a flourish, holding the Lady Legends to only 23 markers.

"I told them (players) not to be intimidated," said UST coach August Sta. Maria. "We came out flat and it almost cost us."

We played our game in the last two sets and that was the key to our win."

In the second game, La Salle notched a first win, holding off San Sebastian, 21-25, 25-14, 25-21, 25-17.

The Lady Archers improved to 1-1, dropping San Sebastian to 0-2.

After losing only one set in taking their first three matches, the Lady Legends slid to second with a 3-1 card. The loss yesterday was a huge blow to the veterans.

Legends coach Tatz Suzara blamed poor reception for the tumble.

"We could not get our offense going in the final two sets because of poor reception," Suzara said.

"At least it was a good fight. We still learned from this loss."

Pimentel, a regular in the RP team and the squad's other reinforcement after setter Rubie de Leon, was simply too much, as 19 of her total came off outright winners despite seeing double-women blocks all game.

"We started the game believing that we can beat that team," Sta. Maria said.

Theresa de la Rosa led the Legends with 17 points, with Zenaida Chavez adding 16.

Rosemarie Prochina chipped in with 13 for PSC, which missed attacker Amy Guanco who sprained her right ankle.

Hotdogs seek No.2 spot vs Beermen

ALREADY defying preseason expectations, Purefoods will go out and try to pull off the most unexpected stunt: Nailing one of the choice seats in the Gran Matador PBA Philippine Cup at the PhilSports Arena.

The TJ Hotdogs face sister squad San Miguel Beer today, hoping to force a tight three-way battle for the No. 2 spot at the end of the elimination round. The top two teams after the double round-robin affair automatically advance to the semifinals of the tournament.

The TJ Hotdogs (7-6) will gun for that incentive using a win against the Beermen in their 4:20 p.m. encounter to boost their chances.

Valenzuela had bone spurs removed on his left foot and will be out for two to four more weeks.

Meneses has back problems and still cannot join the Barako's practice sessions for another week.

Hounded by injuries in the past, the TJ Hotdogs of coach Ryan Gregorio are slowly getting back their bearings with Noy Castillo, Eddie Laure and Mike Hrabak now on the road to full recovery after suffering various ailments.

"Injuries had been our main problem in the past. We want to be as healthy as possible to keep us competitive," said Gregorio.

The TJ Hotdogs landed no better than eighth place in the succeeding conferences after capturing the 2002 Governors Cup due to injuries on some of their key players.

While the TJ Hotdogs are running smoothly, the Beermen had a bumpy ride so far after losing two straight games. The Beermen yielded against the Turbochargers and the FedEx Express, installing them at 6-7 in the middle of the standings. June Navarro BAGUIO CITY—Rommel Gomez scored 36 points to lift Philippine Navy to the top of Flight B in the Fil Division of the 55th Fil-Am Invitational Golf Tournament here.

Navy posted a 105-point aggregate under the PAL Stableford scoring system to lead the Baguio City Government Team, led by Rep. Mauricio Domogan, by six points.

Good Samaritan was in joint third with Yokoska with 88 while Cham-pirik Golf Team was fifth with 79.

Favorite Camp Aguinaldo inexplicably showed up with only three players and managed 78 in the "five to play four to score" format.

Eat Bulaga-Macabud, led by former senator Vicente Sotto III and brother-actor Vic Sotto, was a flop, scoring only 56 points to place 12th in the field of 13.

Okunawa Golf Club, one of the original entries, did not play.

The Sotto brothers played badly in Camp John Hay and did not register their scores.

Their rival team, Fil-Am at Diego, was fourth with 70, followed by Sundowners with 65 and Rural Bankers Association of the Philippines with 63.

Former Baraan Gov. Leonardo Roman scored 23 points but his other teammates at Capitol Hills Golf Club faltered with 59 to place seventh.

Jun Aqui scored 27 points to lead the front-running Syndicate in Flight C of the Am Division.

Syndicate's 82 points was 15 behind the 97 scored by Mario's Mulligans and Batch 92.

Baguio City Government II was fourth with 60, a point behind Davao Eagle Masters. The flight's favorite, Pines Golf Club of California, only managed 54 points with only three players scoring.

Meanwhile, Rudy Ordoñez of the DKA Los Angeles Golf Team scored his first hole-in-one in his seven-year participation in the Fil-Am.

Tour Pilipinas

Bikathon organizers label Trade

By Roy Lizarca

THE TOUR Pilipinas yesterday banned the star-studded Casino Filipino Trade Team from vying in the two-day qualifying races and the 2005 Tour Pilipinas itself.

Organizers of the annual bikathon said the ban will level the playing field and allow the Tour to maintain its "domestic status."

Paquito Rivas, the 1989 Tour champion and now president of the bikathon's race management group, Philippine National Cycling Association, said the Tour intends to cater to riders who do not enjoy the same perks enjoyed by the "Trade Team professionals."

Tour Pilipinas Inc. chair Bert Lina, also the president of the national federation for cycling (Philcycling), backed Rivas' stand.

"It was a matter of making sure that the bigger flock benefits from our endeavor," said Lina. "The Trade Team riders are well taken care of by their managers and the Tour would only want to tend to those who do not get the same privilege."

The Trade Team riders, including Tour defending champion Rhyann Tanguilig, has contracts to race in international races as Trade Team III, a classification of professional teams in the Union Cycliste Internationale, the world governing body for cycling.

Alabang clinches chess crown

By Marlon Bernardino

TAGAYTAY CITY—Alabang-Muntinlupa City topped the 2004 National Inter-Cities and Municipalities despite yielding to Tagaytay City A, 3-1, Monday night in Game Two of their title showdown at the Tagaytay Sports Center here.

The sixth-seeded Alabang team blanked top seed Tagaytay A, 4-0, in Game One Monday night, seizing the momentum in the championship duel of the tournament organized by the National Chess Federation of the Philippines.

"I'm proud of the boys, they really did their best," said team manager and Barangay Alabang chair Victor Ulanday. "After our 4-0 win in Game One, it was hard for Tagaytay to recover as it also needed to blank us in Game Two to force a playoff."

"It's good that Oliver (Dimakling) and Basilio (Pandan) were able to draw their games and give us victory."

Fide Master Dimakling and the untitled Pandan drew with International Master Richard Bitoon and Edmundo Gatus on boards 2 and 4, respectively, to key Alabang's victory worth P100,000.

Their draws compensated for the losses teammates Grandmaster Nelson Mariano II and Randy Segarra absorbed against GM Joey Antonio and 11-year-old Wesley So on boards 1 and 4, respectively.

Fifth seed Maynila B, composed of IM candidate Darwin Laylo, reigning Asian Zonal champion Ronald Dableo, Noel Dela Cruz and Carlo Magno Rosapari, captured third place with a 3-1 triumph over third seed Dasmariñas (Cavite) in Game Two.

Dasmariñas, powered by IM Petro-nio Roca, NM Oliver Barbosa, Raymond Salcedo and Ivan Gil Bug, forced a 2-2 tie in Game One.

NCPP president Go Teng Kok thanked the Tagaytay City government, headed by Mayor Abraham Tolentino, for sponsoring the annual event which attracted 27 teams.

Tagaytay A received the runner-up prize of P60,000 plus trophy while Maynila B got P40,000 plus trophy for third place.

Rounding out the top 13 are Cautilan (Surigao Del Sur), Marikina City Mandaluyong City, Tanauan City (Batangas), Makati City, Manila (Philippine Navy), Maynila "A", Quezon City and Muntinlupa City (Office of the Mayor).

Red Ribbon football fiesta returns today

THE RED Ribbon Football Fiesta tournament resumes today at the Ateneo pitch in Katipunan when Group B leaders Marist School and host Ateneo decide which of them advances into the semifinal round at 9 a.m. The winner is assured of a place in the semis in a format that allows the top team of each group and the second best of either Group A, B or C to advance. The qualifiers then enter a crossover semifinal round with the winners meeting on the Dec. 19 finals.

Group A games today feature unbeaten Xavier school against Mendiola FC at 2:30 p.m. at Xavier in San Juan while Southridge School, another undefeated squad in Group A, meets Magat Salamat at 9 a.m. in Alabang. Group C, which takes a bye today, has the Colegio San Agustin/Hed Center/Claret School selection ahead with no losses followed by Cheng Hua with one defeat. The Red Ribbon Football Fiesta is the official Under-14 tourney of the Philippine Football Federation.

VIJAY Singh caps an unbelievable golf season by earning the nod of his peers

No debates, Singh is golf's best this year

JACKSONVILLE, Florida—Vijay Singh made sure there was no debate about who was No. 1 in golf.

Disappointed last year by losing to Tiger Woods in a close race, Singh used that as motivation to turn in a dominant season that made him an easy choice as PGA Tour player of the year.

"This year was a landslide," Singh said Monday from New York, where he was presented the Jack Nicklaus Award, which is voted on by PGA Tour players. "My thought this year was to play hard and play good for the whole season. That was a fulfilling thing. I didn't have to wait for the votes."

The PGA Tour doesn't release the final votes, although that didn't stop Singh from asking whether any of his peers voted for someone other than him.

How could they? Singh dethroned Woods at No. 1 in the world ranking by beating him in a dramatic duel outside Boston in September. He finished so strong that Singh shattered Woods' earnings record, becoming the first $10 million man in golf. And by winning six of his last nine events, he became only the sixth player in PGA Tour history to win at least nine times.

"It's been a big year," Singh said. "I never thought it was going to be this big, but it's so satisfying to know it has come to this. It was well worth the journey. It's just overwhelming."

Singh could have been talking about any number of journeys. It was tough enough coming from South Pacific islands of Fiji, where Singh used to run across an airport runway to get to the golf course.

Barred from tournament golf over allegations he doped a scorecard, Singh worked as a club pro in Borneo and a bouncer at a bar in Scotland until he could save up enough money to play on the European tour, and eventually make his way over to America.

But the toughest leg might have been this year. Singh figured it would take at least two or three years to have a chance to be No. 1 in the world, and he got it done sooner than anyone imagined.

It started with a victory at Pebble Beach, then back-to-back wins in New Orleans and Houston. He won the Buick Open outside Detroit by holding off John Daly and Woods, then captured his third major at the PGA Championship in a play-off at Whistling Straits.

Singh swept all the big awards in golf—the Arnold Palmer Award for winning the money title with $10.9 million and the Vardon Trophy for having the lowest scoring average. He earlier locked up the PGA of America player of the year, which is based on points.

Next up is the encore. Singh turns 42 in February, but he already has started a new workout program "to take it a little higher," and he sees himself playing into his 50s as long as he stays competitive.

But he has gone from chasing Woods to being ahead of the pack, and Singh wants to stay there.

"As they say, it's really hard to get to the top, but to stay there is going to be the hardest thing," Singh said. "I feel like I'm in an open plain, where all I see is the horizon. I feel like I'm running, and everyone is chasing me. I'm just running as fast as I can."

Other awards

Craig Stadler won Champions Tour player of the year, while Jimmy Walker was voted best on the Nationwide Tour.

The PGA Tour rookie of the year also was an easy choice—British Open champion Todd Hamilton, 39, who got his card at Q-school a year ago after toiling for a dozen years on the Asian and Japan tours.

Hamilton won the Honda Classic with a birdie-birdie finish for a one-shot victory over Davis Love III, then went toe-to-toe with Ernie Els over the final 40 holes at Royal Troon, beating him in a playoff.

John Daly won PGA Tour comeback player of the year, winning the Buick Invitational, in a three-man playoff for his first PGA Tour victory in nine years, and his first on US soil since 1994.

Mark McNulty of South Africa was the Champions Tour rookie of the year, while Hubert Green returned from cancer and was Champions Tour comeback player of the year.

COMEBACK KIDD

Nets receive timely assist

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey—Jason Kidd made his season debut and assisted on Richard Jefferson's game-winning jumper from the lane with 7.1 seconds left as the New Jersey Nets defeated the Toronto Raptors, 88-86, Monday night.

After sitting out the first 16 games recovering from left knee surgery, Kidd had 10 points, six rebounds and three assists in 21 minutes with the Nets restricting his playing time.

Jefferson had 26 points, nine rebounds and eight assists for the Nets, who began the night in last place in the Atlantic Division after winning only four of their first 16 games with Kidd sidelined.

Vince Carter had 22 points for Toronto, but he missed a driving layup just before the final buzzer that would have sent the game to overtime. Chris Bosh added 15 points.

In Atlanta, Josh Smith scored the tiebreaking basket off an offensive rebound with 17.6 seconds remaining, then blocked a shot to help the Hawks snap a nine-game losing streak with a 96-92 triumph over Philadelphia.

One day after turning 19, the teenager was a major reason the Hawks won for only the third time in 17 games this season, overcoming a season-high 36 points by Allen Iverson.

In Chicago, Tony Parker scored 17 points and Tim Duncan had his 16th double-double of the season to help San Antonio win its eighth straight game, a 91-75 rout of Chicago.

Duncan finished with 12 points and 11 rebounds, while Manu Ginobili and Devin Brown added 12 points each.

The victory improved the Spurs to an NBA-best 16-3.

KIDD: Back in action

In Dallas, Chauncey Billups tied his season high with 24 points and Richard Hamilton scored 13 of his 19 in the third quarter as Detroit shocked the Mavericks, 101-85.

The Pistons took a 10-point lead into halftime, then stretched it to 21 in the third. The Mavericks never got closer than 12 the rest of the way.

In Salt Lake City, Shaquille O'Neal pulled down his 10,000th career rebound and Dwyane Wade added 23 points and 12 rebounds to lead Miami past the slumping Jazz, 100-80.

Entering the game, O'Neal needed eight rebounds to become the 31st player with 10,000 career boards. He finished with 21 points and 13 rebounds.

In Denver, Andre Miller scored 29 points and Carmelo Anthony added 28 for Denver, which ripped Orlando, 115-102.

Kenyon Martin scored 23 points and Miller also had seven assists and seven rebounds for the Nuggets, who pushed the ball whenever they could against the Magic.

In Oakland, California, Troy Murphy had a career-high 30 points and 15 rebounds to help Golden State to a 110-106 victory over Boston.

The Warriors won consecutive games for the first time this season.

In Los Angeles, Corey Maggette scored four of his 33 points in the second overtime and the Los Angeles Clippers survived the fourth-quarter ejection of Elton Brand to scrape past Charlotte, 99-93.

Brand, held to a season-low 10 points Saturday, finished with 19 points to help the Clippers win for the sixth time in seven games.

NBA great acquitted; Sprewell probed

HOUSTON, Texas—National Basketball Association legend Calvin Murphy was acquitted on six counts of sexual abuse involving five of his daughters here Monday after jurors deliberated for only two hours.

The former Houston Rockets star shook hands with his attorney and wiped off tears after hearing the verdict on three charges of indecency with a child and three charges of aggravated sexual assault.

During closing arguments, prosecutors painted Murphy as a cheat and a child molester while defense attorneys maintained that the daughters accusing him of sexual assault were lying in an orchestrated effort for money.

The daughters alleged the abuse occurred between 1988 and 1991 when they were between ages 6 and 13.

Standing tall in a league of giants despite a tiny 5-foot-8 frame, Murphy averaged 17.9 points and 4.4 assists during a 13-year career that ended in 1983. He was inducted into the Hall of Fame a decade after his retirement.

Murphy owns the single-season NBA record with a 95.8 free-throw percentage and his all-time total of 89.2 percent is third-best.

Meanwhile, the NBA is reviewing comments Timberwolves swing man Latrell Sprewell allegedly made to a heckler during Minnesota's overtime victory Saturday over the Los Angeles Clippers, according to a newspaper report.

Sprewell responded to the female heckler with a sexually vulgar term, the Star Tribune of Minneapolis reported in its Tuesday editions.

The comment was apparently picked up by a court-side microphone and was broadcast by Los Angeles television station KTLA and by the Timberwolves' broadcast on KSTC television in Minnesota.

Lennox likes Williams' chances

LAS VEGAS, Nevada—Former heavyweight world champion Lennox Lewis is confident that British compatriot Danny Williams can defeat Ukrainian big man Vitali Klitschko here Saturday and win the World Boxing Council crown.

The retired former champion, who stopped Klitschko in his final fight before retiring, said that Williams, an unknown until knocking out Mike Tyson in July, must overcome the reach and size advantages of the taller man to have a chance.

"It's not an easy task, because of his size and definitely his reach," Lewis said in a teleconference Monday. "In one sense Danny is going to find it very difficult. But I have a lot of faith and confidence in Danny. "I believe he can do it. I would love another British heavyweight to take over for me, take the belts and carry on. He has to believe in himself and go out there and do it. But it's not an easy task."

Lewis, whose departure has created a power void in the once-proud division, sees his severe cutting of Klitschko's face in their 2003 fight as an example of what Williams must do to claim the heavyweight throne.

"It definitely will be a factor," Lewis said.

"He definitely cuts easy. It has been his history. I believe if he does get cut, that will weigh heavily on his mind. Once he gets cut, he doesn't know how bad it is. He's going to be in a rushed, panic state trying to win quickly."

Lewis rated Klitschko as the best of the three major heavyweight title holders, ahead of World Boxing Association champion John Ruiz of Puerto Rico and International Boxing Federation champion Chris Byrd of the United States.

"I'm going to give that to Vitali, but there are a lot of unanswered questions about him that he needs to answer," Lewis said. "There's a big stamina question... another is 'Can he really take it on the chin?'"

"In his past he has shown he doesn't have a big heart, can't go on and weather the storm. There are probably other questions we need to find out and answer."

Legend Aaron blasts Bonds

ATLANTA, Georgia—Hank Aaron, the man whose Major League Baseball home run record is being chased by Barry Bonds, has verbally blasted the San Francisco Giants slugger, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported.

The San Francisco Chronicle detailed last week in transcripts of grand jury testimony that Bonds took substances from his personal trainer that were steroids, although Bonds claimed he did not know they were improper drugs.

Bonds is 53 homers shy of breaking Aaron's all-time American record of 755 homers. But Aaron told the newspaper here that extra power and endurance gained from steroids, knowingly or not, taint Bonds' pursuit of history.

"Any way you look at it, it's wrong," Aaron said.

Bonds, 40, told the grand jury investigating the BALCO steroid distribution case that he thought the substances, known as the clear and the cream, were flavoured oil, a nutritional supplement and a salve to combat arthritis.

"At that age, you have to ask 'Did he accomplish all of this by rejuvenating his strength from day to day with those substances?'" Aaron told the newspaper. "I know that when you reach a certain age, you just don't bounce back as quickly as you think you can when you are playing all of those games."

"Drugs won't help you hit the ball. But can they make you recuperate consistently enough to hit the kind of home runs that these guys are hitting?"

PROMO GIMMICK, SAYS ALFIE

'Diet, Kristine consulted me about marriage'

SO IN LOVE, so elusive. Kristine Hermosa and Diether Ocampo

By Nini Valera

WITHOUT confirming or denying that a wedding had taken place, Mayor Tom Esquivel of Jaen, Nueva Ecija, said on national television that lovers Diether Ocampo and Kristine Hermosa had sought his advice on what documents they needed to get married.

But veteran entertainment reporter and talent manager Alfie Lorenzo is sure the alleged marriage is merely a gimmick to promote the couple's next movie, "Lihim," which will be released next year.

"You have to analyze things," Lorenzo told INQUIRER Entertainment last Monday. "They have been teasing the public about an important announcement. But when they are asked about it, they would only say, 'secret.' Remember, 'Lihim' is the title of their movie."

"Ibingay ko sa kanila ang listahan ng mga dapat rulang ibigay (I gave them a list of what they needed to submit)," said Mayor Esquivel in an interview on GMA 7's "S-Files" last Sunday.

"They asked if they could get married anytime, and I told them it depended on the requirements that I told them they needed," Esquivel said in Filipino. "They told me they would come back when they have already decided to get married."

Esquivel said the couple returned in the first week of September with the requirements.

"A marriage is always open to the public," the mayor said. "But it depends on the people. If they think it would be better not to say anything about it, it wouldn't be wrong. If it would harm people, (keeping quiet about it) would be a great help."

He stressed that he could not stop people from researching if a marriage between Diether and Kristine had indeed taken place. "That's legal," he said. "Anybody has the right to fall in love and get married."

Esquivel said he thanks Diether and Kristine are in love with each other.

"Continue loving each other," he said to the lovers. "That's all."

News of the couple's marriage started as blind items in tabloid columns two weeks ago, but Diether and Kristine were identified as the couple by columnist Ethel Ramos last Friday only.

Diether and Kristine could not be found. Not even ABS-CBN, of which they are contract stars, knew where they could be reached.

Rica Dy-Im, public relations manager of the network's Talent Center, told INQUIRER Entertainment last Monday that she herself could not get in touch with the two stars.

"But we would be issuing a statement soon," said Dy-Im.

She said news of the couple's marriage also came as a shock to her. She said she had told the couple's handlers to find them so she could ask them if it were true that they had gotten married.

"One of them is supposedly out of town," Dy-Im said.

Kristine's handler, Allan Real, told INQUIRER Entertainment last Monday that he has not talked to Kristine about the alleged marriage. "I haven't seen her since Saturday evening," Real said.

Kristine also did not show up at the press conference of her movie, "Enteng Kabisapi," last Monday. She stars opposite Vic Sotto in the movie that is part of the Metro Manila Film Festival later this month.

The legend of John Lennon

By Pocholo Concepcion
Contributor

FOR MANY people, pop music history is synonymous with John Lennon—ex-Beatle, artist and peace advocate whose 24th death anniversary falls today.

Not everybody may have known that it was Lennon's mother Julia who first taught him how to play a musical instrument, the banjo, to the tune of Buddy Holly's "That'll Be the Day." And that Lennon, as a 12-year-old kid bored with school, had published his own book of compositions called "Daily Howl," which included drawings, news stories and commentaries. Or that Capitol Records, EMI's US label, had "flatly refused to release early recordings of the Beatles, saying they're 'not going to be a hit... we don't want it.'"

These and loads of other revealing information are contained in the book "Lennon Legend: An Illustrated Life of John Lennon," a beautifully conceived hardcover that comes in a box with a 60-minute audio CD of interviews and a live recording of "Imagine," as well as 40 removable reproductions of handwritten song lyrics, artwork and memorabilia attached throughout the book's pages.

Before, during, after

Written by James Henke, former writer and editor of Rolling

Stone magazine and currently VP of exhibitions and curatorial affairs of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum in Cleveland, Ohio, "Lennon Legend" is a refreshing look into the life and times of the most outspoken member of the world's biggest and most popular band.

In the book, much of what we know about Lennon before, during and after Beatlemania is heightened and complemented by detailed backgrounders and direct quotes, culled from extensive interviews conducted in 1970 and 1980.

For instance, we discover that John formed his first band, the Black Jacks, in 1957 with a friend from high school. Later, he would urge that they change the band's name to the Quarry Men (since they were students at the Quarry Bank Grammar School).

One day, as the Quarry Men were scheduled to play in a church garden event, a friend of Lennon's brought along a 15-year-old "rock and roll devotee," who, Lennon remembered, "was playing Eddie Cochran's 'Twenty Flight Rock' with the guitar" and asked him, on first meeting: "Do you want to join the group?" And I think he said yes the next day.

That 15-year-old was Paul McCartney.

Loss and remembrance

The chronicler of Wilkie's slow death

EUFEMIA "Minne" Solomon Crouse may not be as well-known as Oscar-winning documentary maker Michael Moore but, in the Philippines, she is just as much a crusader as her American counterpart.

SHOW STOPPER

Two years after her award-winning documentary "The Case of Wilkie Duran Monte: Toxic Chemical Victim" first screened, Crouse is still fighting for the rights of ordinary people.

"Wilkie's death was a tragedy that should never have happened," she says.

"And it reflects the total disregard some of these companies have for human life."

Crouse's film tells the story of Wilkie, who worked for a mining company on the picturesque island of Siquijor in the central Philippines.

Rape of Siquijor

When a machine he was working on broke down, Wilkie's foreman ordered him to siphon off a mix of chemical waste, an act which exposed him to the deadly toxins which the documentary says eventually killed him. He was just 44 years old.

In just 18 minutes, Crouse's film covers the last two harrowing years of Wilkie's life and the environmental rape of Siquijor by local mining company Goodfield/Lazt Bay Resources, a joint venture with Green Island Cement of Hong Kong.

Discovered by the Spanish 300 years ago and originally named Isla del Fuego (Fire Island) because of the fireflies which made it glow at night, Siquijor is the smallest of four provinces that form the central Visayas region.

But residents claim that what was once an idyllic island has been destroyed by the mine's operations.

Local environmentalist Cielo Lumacad said the mining company had violated environmental laws and built roads into the limestone quarry through property it did not own.

The company was forced to halt its mining on the island after Crouse discovered it did not have a mining permit.

Crouse's documentary has been celebrated in the Philippines, where it won the Best Documentary award at the 2002 CineManila International Film Festival. At the Brussels International Film Festival the same year, it won in the Committed Film Championing a Cause category.

Pain and sorrow

For 57-year-old Crouse, what began as a documentary on one man's plight has become a personal crusade to protect the island's fragile ecosystem.

Her campaign has not been without pain and sorrow.

Not only did she watch Wilkie endure his slow, agonizing death, she has also been the target of abuse and anonymous threats. Her home on the island was destroyed by a mysterious fire.

She has fought three libel actions against the company, winning one and having the other two thrown out of court.

Crouse said the company's total disregard "WILKIE'S death was a tragedy that should never have happened," says documentarist Crouse (left) of her late subject (above). "He did not have to die. The point I was making with the film was that Wilkie was a human being."

for Wilkie and his plight appalled her and prompted her to make the movie.

"To the company, Wilkie represented nothing," she told Agence France-Presse in an interview in Manila, where she was preparing her case to have the mining operations on the island terminated for good. "He was just a pair of hands. Nothing more."

Wilkie Duran Monte died on June 10, 2001, from what doctors described as septicemia.

bum intended for a Christmas release, decided to write about his childhood home of Liverpool and his memories of places and things he had seen while riding the bus. He thought about names such as Penny Lane, Church Road, and the Abbey Cinema.

But it didn't work out until he decided to delete the names of specific places and go for a more general approach. As he wrote the lyrics, the song "took on a new, mournful tone... about loss, a remembrance of friends and lovers of the past."

That song was "In My Life," which John said was his "first real major piece of work," and now considered by many of the world's highly regarded composers and musicians as one of the greatest songs of all time.

We also began to understand why, in his desire to do something outside the band, Lennon got involved in non-Beatles projects like publishing two books ("In His Own Write," "A Spaniard in the Works") and playing a part in an anti-war film ("How I Won the War"), among others, including the hobby of going to art exhibits.

It was while attending a private viewing of the works of an avant-garde Japanese woman artist in London in 1966 that Lennon met his soul mate, artistic collaborator and second wife, Yoko Ono.

Yoko is, by the way, credited for making the book's publication possible. She's responsible for providing much of the book's highlights—surprise pullout reproductions of original handwritten lyrics, drawings, cards, photos, flyers, posters, performance contracts, concert tickets, articles, letters, notes and what-not—all inserted to enhance a particular anecdote or vignette being discussed on the same page.

It would be unfair to dismiss "Lennon Legend" as yet another effort at perpetuating the rock star myth or simply a marketing

THE LEGEND A2-6

Negative effects of television

TELEVISION has become such a prevalent, ubiquitous peripatetic part of our lives that we don't pay it much mind—except when it really becomes excessively irresponsible, over-the-top and exploitative, and shocks us into belated and retroactive concern.

Otherwise, as media observers handily sum it up, we're grateful to that TV set in our home because it serves us in many different ways: as a time-filler ("You have nothing to do? Watch TV"); a tranquilizer ("The kids are so hyper, they need to watch for a while to simmer down"); a problem solver ("Kids, stop fighting—it's time for your favorite show!"); a punishment ("If you don't stop teasing your little sister, no TV for you!"); a reward ("If you get a high mark in the examination, you can watch an extra hour of TV"); and a procrastination device ("I'll just watch one more program before I do my homework").

In the Philippines, we have thought up yet other uses for TV—as an electronic "yo-yo," as a rich source of chismis, as a way to make some extra money by joining the many contests and raffles that abound on the local boob tubes. So, we do our foreign counterparts three better!

On the other hand, irresponsible and exploitative television worries parents and educators because of its negative effect on young and therefore vulnerable viewers.

Aside from their obvious problem, TV has been found to be less helpful in these ways:

It keeps families from engaging in other activities. Psychologists have noted that families that watch TV a lot don't engage enough in the talks, games, festivities and discussions through which much of a child's learning takes place, and through which his character is formed.

TV is so appealing that it upstages many other activities. Children are likely to choose

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

watching TV over having a story read to them, for instance.

And children reject most other family activities, because they regard them as "boring" when compared to the habit-forming "excitement" of television.

It takes the place of play. Before children are 3 years old, opportunities for active play and exploration are hugely diminished, and replaced by the hypnotic gratification of television.

TV makes children less resourceful. Since watching TV makes diversion so easy and pleasurable, children don't feel the need to look for more active alternatives. As a result, they become more passive than they should be, and don't develop initiative and creativity.

TV makes children want to be like everybody else. Television is so popular as a mass medium that it quickly establishes trends and fads that millions of young people instantly latch onto and imitate in order to "belong."

Unfortunately, they don't become their own persons, and just take the easy way out for acceptable by doing what most other kids are doing. Where's the originality, creativity and dynamism in that? (To be concluded.)

Feedback

FROM Paul R. Mortel of Marikina City: "We very badly need a good film archive where excellent Filipino movies can be stored for future generations to enjoy and learn from.

"Let's hope that once the country's economy improves, the government will give the establishment of a film archive a priority. (There are so many laws passed by Congress that remain unimplemented because the government does not have the money.)"

Harry Potter on video

"HARRY POTTER and the Prisoner of Azkaban" has made its debut on video with a special VCD pack. The previous Potter movies that go with the package, "Sorcerer's Stone" and "Chamber of Secrets," also feature a movie trailer in each video.

In "Sorcerer's Stone" Harry embarks on the adventure of a lifetime when, on his 11th birthday, he learns that he is the orphaned son of two powerful wizards, and himself possesses strong magical powers.

In "Chamber of Secrets," Harry starts his second year at the Hogwarts school for magic by meeting a mysterious elf, riding a flying car, and discovering his ability to talk to snakes and gigantic spiders, all to keep Hogwarts safe.

And in "Prisoner of Azkaban," Harry faces a Hippogriff, Boggarts, soul-sucking Dementors and an escaped prisoner, all leading to the revelation of the truth about the death of his parents.

The Harry Potter series is released by Warner Home video at all Odyssey outlets.

The legend of John Lennon

play to sustain fan interest.

Genius and leader

All told, the book emerges as a multidimensional portrait of a man who, despite having come from a broken home and seeming to be headed nowhere after dropping out of art school, managed to become a success story by pursuing his life's passion through music. As for happiness and peace of mind, he did find those things, too, even with the breakup of the Beatles and his being "crucified" for getting involved in controversial acts and causes with his unpopular Asian wife.

And although he might have wished, at some point in his starving days as a musician, to make lots of money someday, the guy probably did not imagine he would become one of the most important figures in contemporary music history, who was also a writer, poet, filmmaker, artist and political activist with enormous wit and a huge social conscience, a genius and a leader in more ways than one who "pushed the boundaries of music and art, showing others what was possible."

Ironically as it may seem, Lennon, like Jesus (whom he unintentionally reviled by saying at one point that the Beatles had become more popular than Christ), had so much to live for and yet his life was somehow fated to end abruptly, unexpectedly and tragically.

Then again, 24 years after being murdered by a crazed fan (whose forthcoming release from jail is being opposed by Yoko and fans alike), John Lennon lives on in spirit and through his music. The book "Lennon Legend" is a testament to everything good he stood for.

A bit pricey at P1,895 and considering that there are at least seven other books on the Beatles lining the shelves of Powerbooks in Greenbelt 3, "Lennon Legend" still makes for a great holiday treat (it's actually a Christmas gift from a younger brother)—even as a cheaper companion piece, a pirated DVD copy of "Lennon Legend: The Very Best of John Lennon," has also landed on our lap courtesy of a dear sister. But that's another story.

The chronicler of Wilkie's slow death

to find the cause of his illness."

But Crouse was not always destined to be a campaigning filmmaker. A divorce and a car accident in the United States in 1988 changed her life.

Having spent most of her adult life in America, where she worked on the Nasa space programme and at one time in the physics and astronomy department of the University of Maryland, she found herself having to rebuild her life again.

The car accident saw her hospitalized for months with a smashed hip. Doctors also found that she was suffering from a rare disease called "avascular necrosis" or "bone death."

Such a diagnosis would have destroyed most people. But despite having to get around with the use of a metal walker, Crouse volunteered herself to be part of a research program at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore on bone joints.

Before returning to the Philippines in the early 1990s, she enrolled in a television and film production course in San Diego where she produced her first film called "Women in Travel" which focused on ecotourism in the Philippines.

A good man

"Wilkie was my first real documentary," she said.

"Having moved to Siquijor, I first heard about Wilkie from his wife who begged me to try and help him. Seeing the state he was in moved me.

"Wilkie was not an educated man," Crouse said. "He was a good man who worked hard to feed, clothe and educate his three children.

"Wilkie did not have to die. But the casual way the company treated him disgusted me. The point I guess I was making with the film was that Wilkie was a human being.

"I know some people have questioned the sincerity of my motives. I know that once you embark on a fight like this, people will take pot shots at you.

"That doesn't worry me. Everyone is entitled to his or her opinions. But it detracts from the issues that affect us all—our quality of life and the destruction of our environment." APP

Text your way to Paris

PARIS is just a text message away.

After the successful first week of the Korean drama, "Lovers in Paris," on local television, ABS-CBN gives its loyal viewers a chance to experience how it is to fall in love with the romantic city of Paris, through the "Lovers in Paris" texting promo.

Every day, from Nov. 22 to Jan. 21, four winners of P5,000 each will be chosen in the daily electronic raffle. Viewers simply text in the correct answer to the question about the day's episode.

Contestants should download the specific operator logo for the day by texting LOVERS to 2366. Each download costs P15 each. Text entries should be in by 11 p.m. of the episode date.

The promo is open to all Globe and Touch Mobile subscribers. Daily raffle winners will be announced the following day.

All entries collected from the whole duration of the promo qualify for the grand raffle where an all-expense paid trip for two to Paris, including airfare and hotel accommodations, awaits the grand winner.

2-disc album of Phil Collins songs

IN THE course of two failed marriages and a third happy one, Phil Collins has managed to write some of today's most unforgettable pop-rock ballads.

The author of such hits as 1984's Grammy-winning "Against All Odds," 1999's Grammy and Academy Award-winning "You'll Be in My Heart" (from the animated film, "Tarzan") and the Grammy-nominated "Separate Lives" always wears his heart on his sleeve.

"For me, writing music is triggered by emotional upheavals," reveals the 53-year-old music veteran. "My job as a songwriter is to tell the truth, and people understand that. I write about those things and people see themselves in the same position."

Phil's amazing two-disc special compilation, "Phil Collins: Love Songs (A Compilation... Old and New)," reminds us of loves lost, and what love still can be.

Besides containing the above award-winning hits, "Phil Collins: Love Songs (A Compilation... Old and New)" also includes such favorites as the upbeat "Two Hearts," an a cappella version of "True Colors," the yearning "One More Night," the bittersweet "Do You Remember?" and Phil's famous cover of Patti LaBelle's "Groovy Kind of Love."

Also part of the 25-track album are beautiful, live cuts like 1985's "Separate Lives" (a lovely duet with Bridget Bryant recorded in Berlin) and a cover of The Temptations' "My Girl" that Phil and his band played as an encore during his "Dance Into the Light" tour, and the much-loved Fred Astaire/Frank Sinatra standard, "The Way You Look Tonight."

Phil even did a rendition of West Side Story's "Somewhere," Curtis Mayfield's "I've Been Trying," and a live, Roberta Flack-rearranged Irvn Berlin song, "Always."

The album also has "Tearing and Breaking," a nine-year-old song; "Everyday," with a slow, blue mood he wrote during emotional distress; "This Must Be Love," a '60s throwback to adolescent love; "Testify," a positive love song he wrote for his wife Orianne.

It is the ultimate album any Phil Collins fan will need to get through one, or a thousand, more nights, at the special double-disc price of P425 from Warner Music Philippines, at all leading music stores and record bars.

Fitch spares RP from rating downgrade

By Doris C. Dumlaog

LONDON-BASED credit rating agency Fitch Ratings has spared the Philippines from a debt-rating downgrade, but changed its outlook for the country to "negative" from "stable" due to heightened concerns on fiscal vulnerability.

Fitch Ratings yesterday maintained the Republic of the Philippines' long-term foreign currency and long-term local currency ratings of "BB" and "BB+" respectively, or two notches below investment grade, but revised its outlook to negative—which means a downgrade may still be possible in the near term.

"These come against a backdrop of sharply diminishing fiscal flexibility that leaves the public finances vulnerable to shocks, including from domestic interest rate increases, exchange rate pressures or contingent liabilities emanating from the wider public sector or from banking system weaknesses," Fitch Ratings said in its report.

Fitch Ratings gave the country three to six months to show some progress in the implementation of fiscal reforms, in line of what it believed to be an "opportune" stage in the political cycle.

"Sizeable front-loaded tax policy adjustments are needed to set public debt ratios on a firmly downward trend over the medium term," said Brian Coulton, senior director at Fitch Ratings' sovereigns group in Asia.

While giving the Philippines some breathing room at this time, Coulton warned that a "half-hearted tax policy effort" would not save the country from a credit downgrade in the near future.

"Unless the government debt burden falls significantly over the medium term, public finances will remain highly vulnerable to shocks," Coulton said.

"Increased concerns over the health of the banking sector, where balance sheets are weak and underlying profitability is poor, amplify these worries," he stressed.

Coulton added that with half of the public debt sourced abroad, any significant depreciation in peso value would considerably impinge on the government's balance sheet, placing a high premium on the maintenance of monetary stability.

Fitch Ratings' latest report sent a sigh of relief to the government's economic team, which was almost resigned to a credit-rating downgrade.

"We've been given time to deliver on our commitments, but if we don't, we'd be justifiably downgraded," Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas Governor Rafael Buenaventura said.

He noted that the Philippines could suffer as much as two notches of a credit rating downgrade, which would be disastrous to the country.

"We keep on talking about the cost of downgrade on our borrowings, but actually the bigger impact is on foreign direct investments and portfolio inflows," he said, noting a lot of pension funds like the California Public Employees Retirement System (CalPERS) tend to exclude from their radar screen countries which received credit rating downgrades.

Buenaventura said the Supreme Court's reversal of an earlier ruling on the Mining Act as well as the recent privatization of the Masinloc power plant contributed a lot in averting a downgrade for the Philippines.

Fitch Ratings said that while the government's deficit had improved this year, the broader non-

Stocks dip on planned telco taxes

STOCKS extended their decline yesterday, pulled lower by top phone firm PLDT and second-ranked Globe Telecom Inc. on concerns over the impact of planned tax rises on telecoms firms' earnings.

Globe Telecom, a unit of top conglomerate Ayala Corp., and Singapore Telecommunications, fell P10 or 1.02 percent to P970. Ayala dropped 10 centavos or 1.52 percent to P6.50.

Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. (PLDT), a quarter owned by Hong Kong's First Pacific Co. Ltd., wiped out early gains when it announced it was paying debt at the parent level to about P2 billion this month.

PLDT, the most highly valued stock on the exchange with a market capitalization of $4 billion, finished P5 lower at P1,280.

"Part of the apprehension stems from ongoing deliberations on appropriate tax charges that will be levied for the sector," stock brokerage firm 2Trade Asia said in a client report.

A committee in Congress has shelved a proposal to tax the windfall profits of telecom firms and will instead deliberate to raise the 10 percent value-added tax to 12 percent.

ATR KIM Eng Securities analyst Martin Enrile said the tax could slow the double-digit profit growth enjoyed by PLDT and No. 2 firm Globe Telecom as a result of strong growth in mobile subscriber numbers.

THE AMERICAN Chamber of Commerce in the Philippines has urged the government to further "sweeten" investment perks for investors due to tough competition from countries in Asia, Latin America and Eastern Europe.

AmCham executive director Robert Sears said in a statement that other developing countries were offering lower investment costs in terms of wages, power, infrastructure and overall business climate.

"We believe the incentives offered by the Philippines must be considerably more attractive in order to encourage foreign investment," Sears said.

AmCham is recommending steps that were seen to generate more investments for the country, including:

- granting incentives to industries that develop agriculture and create jobs in the rural areas, as well as exporters of completely built vehicles,

- the reduction of tariff on imported building products and other raw materials, and the removal of value-added tax on

Belle revives mining joint venture with Benguet Corp.

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

REAL ESTATE developer Belle Corp. is reviving its mining interests, encouraged by the Supreme Court's recent ruling that opened the mining industry to foreign investors and the better gold and mineral prices in the world market.

Belle vice chair Willy Ocier said in an interview that Belle would revisit its joint-venture project with Benguet Corp. that was suspended sometime in the late 1990s due to low gold prices, which did not make it cost-effective to operate a mine.

"Now with gold at $450 per ounce compared to below $200 per ounce in 1992, we are studying to pre-operate the mine. This was accelerated by the Supreme Court decision," Ocier said.

The Supreme Court last week overturned its previous ruling that prevented foreign companies to own 100 percent in mining projects. Mining officials last week said revenues from mining may pitch in in cutting the budget deficit.

Belle owns seven mining claims in Antamok, Itogon, Benguet, north of the Antamok Mines of Benguet Corp.

In 1992, Belle signed a royalty agreement with Benguet Corp. with Benguet managing and operating the mine and undertaking exploration and development work.

The project was later temporarily suspended and had remained so to date.

At the time of the suspension, about 20 veins or mineralized zones or structures have been identified. One of the veins yields an average of 1.6 to 2.5 grams of gold per metric ton.

Ocier said it has yet to be determined when both companies would open the mine.

Belle earlier said its net earnings from January to September declined 61 percent to P84.8 million from P219.8 million during the same period last year on higher expenses despite an increase in profits.

The company said the higher net income in 2003 was due to gains from debt settlement that amounted to P446.4 million. Without the debt settlement, last year's nine-month financial report would have recorded a net loss of P233.5 million.

Net revenues from sales of real estate and club shares for the nine-month period increased by 55 percent to P327.4 million from P210.7 million. Gross profit likewise soared 99 percent to P230.5 million from P115.9 million during the respective periods.

The bulk of the sales revenues were from Phase 1 of its farm lots subdivision project, Plantation Hills in Batangas, launched last year. Roughly 80 percent of the project has been built.

Benguet Corp., on the other hand, is engaged in gold mining. It first expanded into chromite production in 1934 and into copper production in 1971. The company's gold mining operations are in Benguet Province and the chromite mining operation in Masinloc, Zambales. From 1980 to 1997, the company conducted copper mining operations in San Marcelino, Zambales. From 1988 through 1993, it also conducted gold mining operations in Jose Panganiban, Camarines Norte.

Aside from its core business of mining and mineral exploration, the company and its subsidiaries are actively engaged in water projects, real estate development, forest management and eco-tourism, while maintaining interests in allied industries such as steel casting, trucking and warehousing, trading, engineering and construction services.

Fitch spares RP

financial public sector deficit was expected to remain with a historically high deficit of 6.3 percent of gross domestic product, reflecting the financial woes of the cash-strapped National Power Corp.

It noted that the government's debt hit 78 percent of GDP at end-2003 from 66 percent at end-2001 and was expected to rise further to 82 percent this year with the transfer of debts from Napocor.

The country's current non-investment grade debt rating means the issuer has a "substantial" credit risk, particularly as a result of adverse economic change over time, but business or financial alternatives may be available to allow financial commitments to be met.

"The intensifying burden of servicing this debt is reflected in the ratio of interest to total expenditure, which is set to reach 32 percent in 2005, pinching strains on expenditure management and exceeded in only a few low-rated sovereigns, including Lebanon and Turkey," it noted.

THE TRUTH ABOUT ILLEGAL VERSUS LEGITIMATE LOGGING

And why legitimate logging must continue for the good of our country

We condole with the families of those affected by the recent tragedies caused by unusually heavy rainfall brought by typhoons Winnie and Yoyong, aggravated by forest denudation caused by illegal logging and kaingin farming. For the sake of transparency, fairness and justice, PWPA has organized its own independent fact-finding group to get to the bottom of the tragedy and destruction, and if necessary, assist in prosecuting the guilty parties.

PWPA, however, calls for sobriety and objectivity, so that the legitimate and beneficial side of logging is not lumped with what's illegal and destructive.

COMPARE THESE FACTS AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELF

ILLEGAL LOGGING

LEGITIMATE LOGGING

Legitimate Logging Involves Tree Replanting and Protection of Concession Areas

- Cutting or burning of young trees by firewood gatherers and charcoal makers, illegal loggers and poachers who sell these trees to small unlicensed sawmills and burning of young forests by slash and burn farmers
- No reforestation or replanting of trees by illegitimate players. They just move on to the next forested areas to repeat their illegal activities. Kaingineros plant subsistence crops which can never substitute for trees in preventing soil erosion or landslides.

- Harvesting of only mature trees, in accordance with government regulations, are processed by legitimate wood processing mills; young trees are left to grow for the next harvest.
- Timber License Agreement (TLA) and Industrial Forest Management Agreement (IFMA) permit holders don't cut young trees not only because they are not permitted by regulations but because they are uneconomical in terms of transport, wood recovery and processing efficiency.
- Replanting of new trees to replace those which have been cut.
- Guarding of forest concessions against poachers and illegal loggers.
- Invest heavily in harvesting and wood processing facilities and infrastructure (likewise being used by local communities) and in new forest plantation to ensure the continuous supply of forest products.

Commercial and Fuel Wood Demand / Consumption

Fuel Wood / Charcoal Consumption

40 million cubic meters
(1992 Forestry Statistics)

Commercial Round Timber Demand

2,340 million cubic meters
(Ave. Yearly Demand 1999-2003)

Commercial Round Timber Harvest

0.60 million cubic meters
(Ave. Yearly AAC 1999-2003)

Sources: Philippine Forestry Statistics, 1999-2003
FMB- Forestry Economics Division

- Forests in areas without TLAs and IFMAs continue to be denuded at a very fast rate because they fall prey to poachers and kaingineros

Log Ban Experience, Negros Oriental

Before TLAs
cancellation in 1975

After TLAs
cancellation

Forestry Dev. Center, College of Forestry and Natural Resources,
UP Los Baños Study

- Recent Inquirer report: Gen. Nakar Mayor Hernando Avellaneda admitted that "almost 40% of his constituents depend on illegal logging for a living... that the government could only do so much to provide people with honest jobs."
- A recent report quoting motorists: "Disaster-hit Real was lined with furniture shops offering custom-built tables, lounge chairs and benches made of tropical hard wood cut by nearby unlicensed mini sawmills."
- DENR records reveal the extent of illegal logging and mini-sawmill operations in the coastal towns of Quezon and Aurora and its role in the recent calamity.
- 1/3 of the country's population has already encroached on forest zones.
- Illegal logging has no official mandate, that's why it is illegal.

Legitimate Logging Ensures Forest Sustainability

- Companies with TLAs have been operating in the last 50 years and are now in their second growth forests which proves that forests can be managed and developed on a sustainable basis.
- Example of a typical legitimate logging operation: Surigao Development Corporation (SUDECOR). Hailed recently by forestry experts of the International Timber Trade Organization (ITTO) for its scientific and responsible logging operation—a boon to the locale's biodiversity. SUDECOR is just one of the country's well-managed logging operations, with their thick and well-protected forests.

EFFECTS OF LOGGING BAN ON FOREST DENUDATION

Before TLA Cancellation:
Only mature trees harvested, forest cover maintained

32 TLAs Studied by UPLB

After TLA Cancellation:
• Completely destroyed by illegal loggers, fuel wood gatherers, kaingineros
• Had remaining cover but only because of inaccessibility

Legitimate Logging Has Government Mandate

- Timber License Agreement (TLA) Or Industrial Forest Management Agreement (IFMA) awarded by the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR). Patterned after those of developed countries with their own commercial logging operations in State forestlands.

A TOTAL LOG BAN WILL PROVE MORE DISASTROUS TO OUR NATION.

Consider: • Of the 32 TLAs cancelled from 1985-87, 25 areas became "open city" and were destroyed by illegal loggers, fuel wood gatherers and kaingineros; while only 7, due to inaccessibility, had remaining forest cover. • Before the TLA cancellation, only mature trees were harvested, forest cover maintained.

DO NOT BE OVERTAKEN BY EMOTIONALISM AND GENERALIZATIONS. ILLEGAL LOGGING MUST BE TREATED AS SUCH AND MUST BE SANCTIONED WITH THE FULL FORCE OF THE LAW. LEGITIMATE LOGGING IS THE ANTIDOTE TO FOREST DEGRADATION AND MUST BE SUPPORTED BY ALL.

PLDT seeks to retire $450M in debt in '04

By Clarissa S. Batino

THE PHILIPPINE Long Distance Telephone Co. yesterday said it would cut its debt by about $106 million this month to bring down its fixed-line obligation to about $2 billion by yearend.

The telecom giant said it would prepay on Dec. 20 part of a $145-million borrowing scheduled to mature in two years to save on interests, speed up its debt reduction strategy, and minimize currency risks.

PLDT this year hopes to shave off $350 million in outstanding obligations. The plan to prepay debt would bring to $450 million the total debts retired in 2004.

"By the end of the year, PLDT's fixed line debt balance would be about $2 billion, on track to achieve our target to reduce our debt balance to below $1.5 billion by the end of 2006," PLDT president Napoleon Nazareno said in a statement.

Of the PLDT Group's $2.99 billion debt, $2.2 billion are owed by the fixed-line business. Wireless subsidiaries Smart Communications Inc. and Pinpoint Telephone Corp. have a combined obligation of $718 million.

PLDT said that in the next two weeks, it would prepay part of the $145-million debt facility—35 million US dollars and 7 276 billion Japanese yen—signed in Sept. 2002.

The funds were drawn in June and December 2003 to refinance some of PLDT's maturing obligations last year. Interest on the loan was pegged at six-month London Interbank Rate plus 3.85 points for yen and plus 3.65 points for the dollar.

"We consider our efforts to accelerate our debt reduction program to be a prudent move that would not only generate interest savings but also improve our balance sheet profile and mitigate our risks exposure," Nazareno said.

During a period of foreign exchange volatility, companies with huge dollar exposure like PLDT tend to incur forex losses. This year, the telecom giant said it would likely book a P2-billion exchange loss out of its total "unhedged" debt.

The country's most profitable firm with a record net income of P20 billion in the first nine months is targeting to end the year with P24 billion in profits.

PLDT chair Manuel Pangalanan said the company's profit target this year would not be affected by the foreign exchange losses that may arise from the adoption of new international accounting standards.

Annabelle Chua, PLDT senior vice president and treasurer, also said this would not affect the company's bottomline.

"It would be PNL (Profit and Loss Statement) neutral," Chua said. "We are required to book the losses each year depending on how the foreign exchange moved. Losses on previous years would be charged to the balance sheet."

Chua said the exchange rate was not very volatile this year compared to previous years. The peso had averaged at about P56 to a dollar.

Chua said that the bulk of PLDT's debt were hedged. She said the new accounting would cover only the obligations that were not hedged or protected by foreign exchange fluctuations.

Companies worldwide must comply with two new international accounting standards.

The first, already being implemented this year, requires companies to book any foreign exchange losses on transaction on the year these were incurred and not later.

Up for adoption next year is the requirement that outstanding losses on foreign exchange transactions be made transparent.

Nazareno said the company would start adopting the new global accounting benchmark this fourth quarter.

Subsidy loss may force NFA to hike price of rice

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE RETAIL price of the cheapest available rice in the market may increase by as much as P3 per kilo next year to P21 from the current average of P18 if the government fails to subsidize its trading unit the National Food Authority (NFA).

At present, the state-owned trading firm has been scrambling for rice imports to secure the national buffer stocks that have been depleted by the typhoon relief operations.

The NFA will have to deal with the rising world market price of the commodity—now pegged at $300 per metric ton—when it begins importing some 320,000 metric tons of rice this January.

"The question now is, will the national government again foot the bill for the consumers?" NFA Administrator Gregorio Y. Tan Jr. asked. "The tight market supply and increasing demand has put pressure on world market prices. As we speak, prices are moving up. We would have to incur more losses that is projected at P2.1 billion."

Tan said that if the Department of Budget and Management does not have enough funds to partly support the cost of the NFA's rice imports, the agency would have no choice but to jack up retail prices.

He added that the recent decision to increase the buying support price for palay by P1 per kilo had worsened the NFA's financial state.

The state firm traditionally has been buying palay from farmers at P8 to P9.50 per kilo (which is higher than private traders' price to increase farmers' income.) Nevertheless, it sells at lower retail prices for the sake of the consumers.

The NFA has estimated rice imports to reach 900,000 metric tons in 2005. This may cost the country P17 billion, based on the $340 per metric ton cost and an exchange rate of P56 to the US dollar.

Also, Tan is not discounting the possibility that the import volume may increase depending on how badly the El Niño weather disturbance affects production.

"Let's hope that the country could hurdle the El Niño next year and enable farmers to increase production," an NFA official said. "Otherwise, it will be more expensive to import rice."

Belgian mission checks out RP trade prospects

By Ronnel W. Domingo

SOME 35 Belgian companies are in town for a three-day visit to scout for possible business ventures and promote their country as a gateway to trade with Europe, according to the Embassy of Belgium.

The arrival of the business officials last Monday kicked off the nine-day three-country Belgian economic and trade mission that would also cover Kuala Lumpur and Jakarta.

"The (mission) fills us with pride because it emphasizes the interest of Belgian companies for business opportunities in the Philippines," Belgian Ambassador Christian Tanghe said.

"The visit means that the Philippines radiates the rich potential it has to offer and that, in spite of the numerous challenges that still lie ahead, the opportunities are spotted by our companies," Tanghe added.

The envoy also said that the administration's medium-term development plan set the right priorities for the next six years.

He believes the plan is conducive to enhancing the climate for business even further.

"We encourage all involved—both official and private—to implement it with determination and focus," Tanghe said. "I am sure it would lure many more trade missions from Belgium and Europe."

"I am convinced that this mission would promote Belgium further as an important gateway for Philippine business opportunities in the European Union."

Data from the embassy show that Belgium is currently the fourth-largest market for Philippine exports in the EU.

In the first eight months of 2004, two-way trade amounted to P16.5 billion or about 222 million euros.

Located in the northwest of Europe, Belgium is part of a major urban and commercial axis. It is a heavily urbanized zone extending from England to the north of Italy.

The Belgian delegates include representatives from the sectors of agribusiness, food, pharmaceuticals and chemicals, waste management, medical equipment and health services, energy, transportation, mining, logistics, financial services and telecommunications.

With solar plant, Mindanao gains power edge

THE 1-MEGAWATT solar power facility in Cagayan de Oro City, the largest grid-connected solar plant in the country, is expected to provide more reliable power to Mindanao and ease some of the main grid's dependence on hydroelectric power.

With the commissioning of the new solar power facility, which would be operated by the Cagayan Electric Power and Light Co. (Cepalco), Mindanao would now be able to enjoy a more reliable supply of power, Energy Secretary Vincent Perez said.

According to data from the Department of Energy, last year, hydro accounted for 62 percent of Mindanao's generation mix, with oil contributing 25 percent and geothermal another 13 percent.

President Macapagal-Arroyo herself yesterday led the launching ceremony of the $5.3-million plant, which used 6,480 units of polycrystalline silicon solar cells from Japan's Sharp Corp. to capture sunlight for conversion into electricity.

Apart from this plant, many areas in Mindanao were already harnessing the power of the sun to produce electricity. These, however, were mostly off-grid solar power facilities generally used in remote areas.

DOE data show that around 160 communities in Mindanao are now enjoying the benefits of solar energy through the United States Agency for International Development Alliance for Mindanao Off-grid Renewable Energy Program (USAID-Amore).

The state-owned Philippine National Oil Co., through its Solar Home Systems Distribution Project in the Cordillera Administrative Region, is likewise tapping the power of the sun for electricity production.

The PNOC project aims to install around 15,000 solar home system units in unelectrified households in rural locations.

Alternative energy sources, Perez said, were most welcome in Mindanao as the grid's current generating capacity was not enough to meet its rapidly increasing demand, particularly from high-growth areas Davao and General Santos.

According to the DOE's updated Power Development Plan, Mindanao will be needing another 150 MW of new capacity by next year. However, the only committed project in the main grid is the 200-MW clean coal power facility that is seen to come on stream by 2006.

RATE HIKE NOT ENOUGH

Napocor losses mounting, expert says

By Abigail L. Ho

THE NATIONAL Power Corp. likely incurred some P8 billion in losses since October as the Energy Regulatory Commission decided to only grant it a partial rate hike.

Consumer and Oil Price Watch chair Raul T. Concepcion said the ERC's approval of only a 98-centavo-per-kwh rate hike did little to alleviate its cash problems.

Napocor wanted a rate increase of P1.87 per kilowatt-hour (kWh) to partially solve its financial difficulties.

"The longer we delay the remaining rate increase, the more consumers will have to pay later on," he said in a statement yesterday.

He said Napocor's proposed rate hike of P1.87 per kWh should have given the state firm a return on rate base—a measure of profitability—of 8 percent.

But since the ERC approved only about half of what the state firm asked for, Napocor continued to incur losses these past months, amounting to some P8 billion since October.

The ERC had scheduled a final public hearing on the Napocor rate increase on Dec. 16. Since the current additional 98 centavos per kWh that the state firm was charging its customers was given under a provisional authority, the permanent rate hike would still have to undergo public consultations before being approved by the regulatory body.

After that public hearing, he said the ERC would already decide on the merits of the proposed rate hike.

The regulatory body would decide whether the state firm would be getting what it originally asked for.

Even with another looming Napocor rate hike, Concepcion said consumers would have a little less to worry about in terms of electricity rates as the government had already absorbed P200 billion of Napocor's debts.

The debt absorption, he said, meant that the principal and the interest would no longer be included in Napocor's books.

The absorbed amount would also no longer be considered in succeeding rate hike petitions.

He said the COPW would now be working at computing how soon Napocor's debts would be repaid as well as how much profits the government would generate from the sale of Napocor's generation assets and the privatization of the National Transmission Corp. through a concession agreement.

THE SALE of Napocor's assets, such as power plants, would help solve the power firm's problems.

Was it the chauffeur or the papaitan?

We've never figured it out really, what worked better in the end, but we're thankful anyway.

Mrs. Gwen Rocas had always been accompanied by her husband to the bank. He'd open the door for her, see her through, explain what the forms were for, tell her where to sign. And she'd always be listening cheerfully, her pen flashing in compliance. She was glad, we guessed, to have someone sorting out all the forms and procedures for her.

But the day came when Mr. Rocas, quite regrettably, passed away. And our account with his wife appeared doomed to follow in his footsteps as well.

Until we remembered that she had never, in all her years with us, come to the bank by herself. It was always an adventure she embarked upon with her husband. And something we couldn't expect her to do alone.

So we arranged for a driver to pick her up at her house and bring her over. Smiling awkwardly, she stepped into the car. And just as awkwardly, we stepped into the role long reserved for her husband.

Smile by smile, we navigated the course of her transactions with her. And told her that if she wanted, we could keep on doing the same thing for her every time she needed to visit the bank. Her smile was all the yes we needed.

We took her to lunch, too, that day. To a place that, to our knowledge, served the best papaitan in Manila

(we had learned earlier that it was, strangely enough, her favorite dish). She talked about how she was coping with the loss of her husband, about how the house seemed too big now, about how helpful people had been to her. And how the papaitan felt somehow short of its billing.

We had the driver bring her back home and we heard nothing from Mrs. Rocas for the next two weeks. And then she called, asking to be picked up. She had some deposits to make, she said. And a newly cooked pot full of what was truly, as we discovered, the best papaitan in Manila.

(If this doesn't sound like the kind of relationship you have with your bank, you may want to give us a try.)

Deal on NDC investment in SLEX readied

By Clarissa S. Batino

SOUTH Luzon Tollway Corp., a joint venture between the government and Hopewell Crown Infrastructure Inc., and National Development Co. are working out the agreement that will pave the way for the latter's infusion into the project of some P3 billion in loan and quasi equity.

Hopewell Crown president Joel Bafares said the agreement would allow the state-owned NDC, through the Philippine Infrastructure Corp., to participate in the P10-billion upgrade of the South Luzon Expressway.

Bafares said NDC would infuse into the project P3 billion in loan and quasi equity.

About 200,000 motorists use the SLEX daily and roughly 60 percent of Luzon's produce is transported through this highway everyday.

"NDC's entry will be backed by preferred shares and bonds. Its shares will likely be non-voting and that the control will remain with the current stakeholders," he said.

The existing stakeholders, according to Bafares, want the NDC to take charge of the right-of-way acquisition so that civil works can start next year.

Hopewell Crown owns 80 percent of the tollway company while the state-run Philippine National Construction Corp. holds the remaining 20 percent.

Hopewell Crown is 51 percent owned by MTD Capital Berhad of Malaysia, 39 percent by Filipino firm Northeast Development and Acquisitions Corp. and 10 percent by Hopewell Holdings Ltd. of Hong Kong-based tycoon Gordon Wu.

The Hong Kong firm was the original proponent of the Slex upgrade. Wu signed a $480-million deal with the Estrada administration to carry out the two-phase SLEX rehabilitation and expansion.

The first phase of the P10-billion project covers the repair of the Alabang viaduct, the widening of Alabang to Calamba network and the link-up of SLEX in Calamba to the Southern Tagalog Arterial Road or Star in Sto. Tomas, Batangas. Phase two is the extension of SLEX from Calamba all the way to Lucena City.

Bafares said that of the P10 billion in project cost, P3 billion would be financed through equity infusion and P7 billion through borrowings. The P3-billion equity will come from Northeast Development, MTD Capital and Hopewell Holdings.

Agreement would start soon. The tollway firm and the PNOC would discuss the parameters of the Stoa with the Tollway Regulatory Board.

The Stoa defines the tollway rate that would make the venture viable. A Stoa is required by creditors prior to the granting of the loan as this determines the capability of the borrowers to pay.

Bafares said the International Finance Corp. had agreed to put in $30 million in quasi equity and to arrange about $100 million in debt. Metrobank's First Metro Investment Corp. was also interested to underwrite a P3-billion loan.

GIR hit 9-mo low of $15.8B in Nov.

By Doris C. Dumiao

THE COUNTRY'S gross international reserves slipped to a nine-month low of $15.82 billion in November due to the servicing of public sector debt.

Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas Governor Rafael Buenaventura said yesterday that the 11-month GIR level was 0.6 percent lower than the October revised figure of $15.92 billion.

"Probably we'll end the year closer to these numbers," he said.

The end-November GIR build-up was also lower than the $16.82 billion level posted during the same period last year.

"The decline in reserves was attributed mainly to the debt service requirements of the national government and the BSP," Buenaventura said.

Buenaventura, however, said the GIR level was still enough to cover about 4.2 months of imports of goods as well as payments of services and income.

"Alternatively, this level was equivalent to 2.6 times the country's short-term debt based on original maturity and 1.4 times based on residual maturity," he said.

Short-term debt based on residual maturity refers to outstanding short-term external debt on original maturity plus principal payments on medium- and long-term loans of the public and private sectors falling due within the next 12 months.

As a result, the BSP's net international reserves (BSP-NIR) as of end-November 2004, inclusive of revaluation of reserve assets and reserve-related liabilities, decreased slightly to $14.12 billion from last month's level of $14.2 billion.

The GIR—consisting of the BSP's gross foreign currency holdings, gold reserves, special drawing rights from multilateral institutions and foreign investments—is an indicator of the government's ability to service the foreign exchange requirements of the economy.

The BSP likewise dips into the GIR when it needs to defend the local currency from speculative attacks.

The slower build-up in foreign reserves this year was partly due to the slowdown in the current account surplus, a major component of the balance of payments.

The current account records trade in goods and services as well as transfers while the capital and financial account records loan transactions, investment flows, short-term capital and other related items.

According to the BSP, the slower current account surplus this year was due to the rise in imports and did not mean that the economy was becoming less competitive in global trade. The increase in the import bill was also attributed to skyrocketing oil prices.

For next year, the BSP expects the country to spend about $4.5 billion on foreign debt servicing, about $1 billion less than the requirements estimated this year.

The slowdown in these financing requirements is seen to contribute to the projected swing to a balance of payment surplus in 2005 and lessen pressures on the peso-dollar exchange rate.

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo called on the private and public sectors to work together in connecting schools to the Net during the opening ceremonies of the 1st National ICTS in Basic Education Congress in Cebu City. With the President were PLDT and Smart public affairs head Mon Isberto, Foundation for Information Technology Education and Development chair Roberto R. Romulo and Education Secretary Florencio B. Abad. The congress was attended by some 800 public and private school teachers and administrators, as well as stakeholders from the private sector and the NGO community. The PLDT group of companies sponsored the event.

ATR KE goes regional, invests in HK-based private equity fund

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

A GROUP led by investment firm ATR KE Capital Partners Inc. is investing roughly $1.5 million in a Hong Kong-based private equity fund that will, in turn, invest in Asian companies.

ATR KE Capital has signed yesterday an agreement with Rim Asia Capital Partners G.P., a new fund that will have an initial capitalization of $23 million.

ATR KE Capital president Manuel Tordesillas told the INQUIRER that the fund's capital might be increased to $100 million once it was offered to investors in the United States and Europe, aside from those in Asia.

The fund will be offering in Asian pre-IPO (initial public offering) companies and even listed companies. It aims to tap the growth seen in countries like China, Taiwan and Korea.

ATR KE Capital is investing roughly $500,000 or nearly P25 million in the Hong Kong fund.

Together with its private clients, ATR KE Capital will hold a 6-percent stake in Rim Asia.

"The outlook on Asia is very good and by investing in the private equity fund, we will be able to access investment opportunities throughout the region in partnership with leading players in key countries like China, Taiwan and Korea," Tordesillas said.

ATR KE Capital is a wholly-owned subsidiary of listed firm ATR Kim Eng Financial Corp. and is ranked among the top five investment houses in the country.

ATR KE Capital has holdings in brokerage firm ATR-Kim Eng Securities, AsianLife & General Assurance Corp., AsianLife Financial Assurance Corp., Prebon Philippines and The Mutual Fund Management Company of the Philippines, which holds the P140-million Kabukayan Fund.

ATR KE Capital was recently awarded the best domestic investment bank by The Asset financial magazine for 2004. It recently managed the P1.1 billion initial public offering of International Exchange Bank (IBank) and the almost P750-million offering of Philippine Stock Exchange shares.

AG&P pays initial P20M to separated workers

AG&P is stirring again, landing projects abroad and earning enough to pay its separated workers an initial P20 million to settle a labor dispute that, combined with the Asian financial crisis, sent the company into a court-ordered rehabilitation.

The rehabilitation plan provides for the payment of an additional P50 million next year for the separation benefits of 1,064 workers involved.

The country's oldest engineering company resumed operations in its Batangas Heavy Fabrication Yard middle of last year with projects from local clients. Early this year, it sent 280 workers to Angola to undertake a hookup and commissioning project on an offshore gas compression plant owned by Chevron Texaco.

"AG&P still carries its corporate charisma among international clients and has the required competence to carry out technically difficult projects. Our latest foreign clients are very happy with our work and are in fact strongly endorsing us to new and bigger projects," said company president Angelito Bermudez.

Bermudez said that settling the labor claims was critical to ensuring uninterrupted operations. The company has rehired many of the separated workers who possess the required qualifications.

AG&P started operations in 1902. In 1996, a group led by DMCI acquired majority shares in the company. AG&P was severely affected by the Asian financial crisis and had to suspend operations and seek court protection four years ago.

How do you deal with your best talent?

DEAR WW: I just lost one of my best employees. And now a few others are starting to make similar noises. What can I do to convince them to stay?

Sticky

Anyone worried about keeping their best people needs to know about Howard Brown. He's not a retention guru, CEO or consultant; in fact, you could argue that he is the antithesis of retention. It all started on Howard's wedding day, when a guest at his wedding brought too many friends. Howard shot him. Howard's honeymoon had to wait; he spent the night in the slammer.

Many of us are more like Howard than we'd care to admit. We march down the aisle and vow to make a commitment to our best talent—then we fill them full of buckshot. Follow the tips below and it will increase the odds that you'll have a long-term relationship with your top people.

For more, check out Leigh Branham's book, "Keeping the People Who Keep You in Business" (Amacom, 2001)

Do you know who your top talent is? Duh. It's surprising how many companies don't even know who their best men and best women are. But don't just look at the numbers; look for the team players and the people who make everyone around them better.

Are they treated fairly? Recently, we did a poll at Working Wounded/ABCnews.com; eight percent said that a bigger paycheck was most important to them while 41 percent said that at the top of their list was being treated fairly.

Other polls back this up, simply treating people fairly will go a long way to keeping your people happy. Are they constantly challenged? There is an old quote, "You paid for my hands, you could have had my brain for free." Most employees like a job that challenges them.

WORKING WOUNDED

Bob Rosner

Unfortunately, most bosses never take the time to learn how they'd like to be challenged. Sit down with each of your top talent and ask what matters to them, before you can become stickier for your best talent, you've got find out their priorities.

Do you increase their responsibility and visibility? It's natural to want a bigger sandbox and more credit when you're a top performer. And it's easier to do than many of us realize. Next time there is a senior staff meeting, can you send one of your top talent to sit in for you? Can you give them more control over their projects? Or can you give them credit publicly for something they've accomplished?

Do you keep in touch even after they've left? More and more companies have learned that it's smart to keep in touch with former employees. It's not just out of generosity or kindness; as long as they haven't gone to a direct competitor, they can often send a substantial amount of business your way. But not if you treat them like traitors.

If you want to avoid a nasty separation, put effort into keeping your vows to your current top talent.

Here are the results from a recent workingwounded.com/ABCnews.com online ballot: How much of a priority is keeping your top talent?

—Given the economy, it's not at the top of my list, 15.6 percent

—There are plenty of hungry people out there if they're unhappy, 31.3 percent

—Retention is job number 1,

STI takes initiative in bringing Filipino health care workers to Japan

By Candy G. Villanueva
Contributor

now the job market is global. It is the whole world," says Tanco.

Growing need

Because of the population decline, Medical Associa claims that they have a growing need for health care professionals. For next year alone, they will need over 5,000 nurses and caregivers in Japan. STI and GROW hope to supply this need. Tanco adds that their side would try to send as many health care professionals as they can. He says that there should not be a quantitative restriction. "We are talking to the government that we should not put a cap or number on the professionals going to Japan."

According to Yoshio Kato, CEO and president of Medical Associa, STI was chosen as a partner because of its large network of schools and its capability to provide world-class training to Filipino nurses and caregivers. An Information, Communication and Technology (ICT) education services group, STI continues to expand its program offerings beyond computer courses. The company has branched out to engineering, education, business and health care. Presently, 20 out of its more than 100 schools are offering BS Nursing. STI also holds a majority stake at the Delos Santos-STI College of Health Professions.

Japanese company

Braving the storm, Kato arrived from Japan last week to take a closer look into the background of Filipino nurses and caregivers in the Philippines and formalize the partnership with STI. With STI president Monico Jacob and executive committee chairman Eusebio Tanco, the partnership was sealed with the contract signing last Dec. 2 at the STI headquarters in Makati.

Medical Associa is a human resources solutions company that focuses on meeting the needs of both employers and employees in the health care industry. They service hundreds of hospitals, pharmacies, clinics, nursing homes and long-term care facilities in Japan. Since 1985, Medical Associa has placed over 16,000 health care professionals in Japan. Next year, the company hopes to increase this number substantially with the influx of Filipino workers. According to Tanco, Medical Associa is partial to the Filipino health care workers. "We are the preferred ones because we are caring and friendly."

IT discipline

While waiting for the government to finalize the agreement, STI and GROW are preparing the Filipino health care professionals. They are currently training nurses and caregivers to help them meet Japan's standards. The training includes intensive Japanese language instructions. In addition, STI is also including IT in their curriculum. "We are providing an IT discipline for our health care professionals because the whole world is electronically wired today," claims Jacob. He notes how Japan and other progressive countries operate electronically in hospitals. He says most countries no longer use charts. Health care professionals use PDAs and most hospitals are wired. "You can't avoid the fact that we are in an IT century. STI is in a better position to provide health care workers with IT proficiency so they are better equipped to meet the requirements of health care in Japan and around the world."

Upon the signing of the FTA, the country is also expecting Japan to open the market for Filipino IT workers, engineers and architects. STI is preparing for this market. "Our mission as an education institution goes beyond the realm of providing quality education. We go every step of the way to ensure our students become valuable and productive members of society," says Jacob. "This is our way of helping our people and our country. The partnership with Medical Associa is another major step towards this end."

Deserving accountant yearns for recognition

By Tita Datu Puangco

I'M CURRENTLY with a government regulatory agency. On our agency anniversary, model employees among the rank-and-file, supervisors, and managers will be given citations.

The criteria in the search for this year's cream of the crop, however, appears to be out of turn because of one requirement to qualify for nomination. The person should have worked at least three years with the agency. It is astonishing how or why length of employment has become relevant in the selection process. I think measuring the worth of an employee's contribution is better directed towards such goals as savings, efficiency and effectiveness enhancements, cost control, and other beneficial endeavors.

The imposition of three years minimum tenure excludes many outstanding aspirants. Exclusion of a newcomer whose achievement surpasses those of an old-timer due to such prerequisite is simply unfair. I think this situation diminishes the significance of accomplishment and, consequently, the workplace does not become conducive to the expression of one's best abilities.

Sometime this year, my efforts as field office accountant succeeded in outsmarting the cunning of a collecting officer who has been skimming the agency's revenues. Without going into details, such depredation had gone unnoticed for a couple of years prior to my assumption of office. My findings were solid and not simply based on a hastily, ready-made conclusion. There was no way out for the perpetrator. In fact, he admitted to being culpable with just one stroke.

Does it not behoove the agency to recognize such a good deed that allows recouping losses and preventing recurrence of seemingly interminable cheating and stealing? Furthermore, the accountant did not succumb to the temptation of a pay-off in terms of a percentage cut in the loot taken in the past and share in the amount to be carved out on future collection proceeds. The accountant chose to do the right thing; he junked the opportunity to make easy money despite knowing that such ar-

Life lessons from Papa

I'VE WRITTEN a lot about my mom in this column, but I've never written anything about my father. I guess that's being unfair, because my father's influenced my work and my being a parent as much as my mom has. It's just that his impact on me is less obtrusive—like he is. While my mom does things with flash and flair, my father moves silently, unobtrusively. Parenting experts will correctly surmise that Papa's un-demonstrativeness has been a source of angst for me, but when I think about it, I realize it's precisely his taciturn manner that's given me the strength and confidence to deal with some great milestones in my life.

These are some of the things he's managed to teach me, in not so many words.

One: Take charge of yourself

I am 16 years old. I'm in UP Los Baños, a strange land with strange customs, strange food, strangers. I am to live in the Vet Med Dorm. Mom's in the US. How will I survive?

My Papa knows. He's an expert dormer. He likes telling us about his adventures in Narra and Molave, two dormitories in UP Diliman. He also told me about his fraternity, Sigma Rho. It's like he had been preparing me all throughout my young life for this transition from girl to young lady: the big, wild, wonderful world of college.

Right now, however, I don't feel like a lady. We stand in line together at registration. Oddly, I don't feel embarrassed. I'm with my Papa, so what? He explains "reg" to me, but I understand nothing amidst the din. Then, we hear something that will later always elicit laughter round the dinner table. The Reg Assistant is calling out the names of the students—last name first, followed by the first name—whose forms are ready.

"Bayani!" he says. Then titters. "Great!"

We crack up.

Back in the dorm, Papa even helps me make my bed. He is the one who slips on the covers, tugs at the sheets, pulls on the pillowcases. I watch in fascination.

When it's time for him to leave, I feel like crying, and maybe he does, too. But—after years of being trained to act cool in any circumstance (the only time we ever cried together was when his dad, Lolo Tomas, died a couple of years before)—we don't. So I hug him, kiss him, say thank you. He asks one last time before he goes: will you be all right? I say yes. I have a knot of fear clogging up the base of my throat, but I don't let it escape. Papa turns and walks down the corridor.

Sometimes, I wish I had that old helplessness, so that I could experience again his taking care of me. But I realize that was precisely what my Papa was teaching me, then: take charge of yourself. In the end, no one will take care of you but yourself. It's what I'm starting to teach my daughter, in increments that fit her age.

Two: never believe anyone who says you're going to fail

I'm 20, doing my film thesis, and applying to jobs left and right. One production house that's interested has hired me to work as scriptwriter/production assistant for an event. Unfortunately, though, filming has left my schedules all screwed up. I resign via a letter, and forget about it. I am surprised, therefore, when a friend tells me that she overheard my ex-future-ex boss comment that with my attitude, I'd "never make it in the industry."

I relate everything to Papa, scared that maybe indeed, this lady had the power to smother my future in media. He huffs. "Sulatan mo ulit," he says. "Tell them, 'up yours!'"

I don't, of course. But I almost do, five years later, when I'm a desk editor of The Business Daily and that same lady tracks me down and calls me to help with an event. "Oh, I'm sorry, busy ako e," I answer. I wonder where she is now.

It's the same sort of encouragement I give my daughter—and my team at the magazine: Just go forward. Don't listen to those who say you can't do it.

Three: Always decide on things with a clear head

It's a lesson I hear time and again, in different versions, over the next several years, especially during my darkest moments. First, when I find out I am pregnant with my daughter. I had already told my mom, but Papa has yet to know. He's in the sunroom, reading the papers, and I run to him, bury my face in his chest. "What am I going to do?" I wail. "What do you mean what are you going to do?" he says, patting my shoulder. "You're going to have a baby. Take care of her."

And, again, when my marriage is on the rocks. In my fits of rage against my husband, I try to force Papa to pull strings (he's a lawyer) and have my marriage certificate pulled out, expedite my annulment—anything to get me out of the mess I'm in. "Papa! Do it!" I scream. Again, his infuriating calm: "You must be crazy. You got into that, you fix it. Matanda ka na."

Yes, I am. And Mardy and I are friends now—still separated, but not enemies.

Happy birthday, Pa

Today, Papa turns 60. He is still the perennial fraternalist; a guy from the old school. He gets his hair cut by the same guy for the past 20 years, insists that his pants are ironed with pleats, and unlike men his age, still looks pretty much like he did when he was in college—slim, poker-faced, mabango. When he enters a party, he makes himself comfortable with a Scotch and cigarette, sits quietly, and waits for the people to come to him. And believe me, they do.

Admittedly—and like how many kids feel about their parents—I sometimes wish things could be less detached between us. "Ang cool ng dad mo!" my cousins and friends tell me when they get to talk to him. Yeah, I reply dryly, sometimes too cool for his own good. But I say it much in the manner people seem to dismiss a compliment but actually encourage it. They take the bait: "Wool Pareho naman kayo el!" "Hindi ha," I insist, twirling the ice in my Scotch glass, trying to copy Peter Ustinov when guesting with Merv Griffin.

Or maybe, I'm just copying Papa.

rangements would leave no trail of evidence of wrongdoing on his part.

Would it be presumptuous to raise my objection on the inclusion of length of employment in determining whom to proclaim model employees? Is there a conflict of interest for me to raise the issue? Thank you.

Deserving Achiever

For a start, let me congratulate you for your diligence in your work as an accountant. As a Filipino and taxpayer, I rejoice that you are able to go against the current and stop one person from continuing to steal from the agency coffers. In my view, doing good is its own reward. I hope the fact that your deed was not recognized by your agency does not discourage you from continuing to do good. We know that "the softest pillow is a clean conscience" and the best rewards are not mere earthly rewards.

On the recognition criterion of a "three-year tenure," trust management as they exercise their management prerogative on awards. One reason I can think of is to ensure that awardees show steady excellent performance. Some employees may show outstanding performance on their first year and slacken off on the second year.

There is no rule prohibiting your giving suggestion to management or the committee responsible for the awards that they rethink the criteria for the awards. But the change has to be in the light of the common good rather than self-interest.

You mentioned your achievement.

Frankly, I think the positive incident is part of your role and responsibility as a field accountant and your deed meets performance standards. I don't mean to minimize it, but you may have to create first a track record of performance. So my suggestion for you is to be patient. Do not work simply to be recognized. Work because it is the best service you can give to people in your office and to your family. Work because you are able to fulfill yourself using your God-given talents. Work because it contributes to your well-being and quality of life.

Meantime, continue to rejoice. In God's time you will get the recognition you deserve.

BMW 1 series' side profile

This 'One' tugs hatchbacks to higher levels

By Tessa R. Salazar

THE ONE is here. No, it's not Neo, and we're not in some make believe reality of "The Matrix."

The One, or simply the "1" series from BMW, is as real as any hatchback gets, and it signifies BMW's real intentions of being the cream of the crop, the ultimate carmaker, the No. 1 in the world in all segments by 2008.

Biggest growing market

To execute that, however, BMW needs to speed things up a bit in terms of production. Through market investigation, BMW discovered that the biggest growing market in the world between 2002 and projected through 2014—a market that would expand up to 80 percent—is the premium small cars.

And, as markets go, premium small cars are the preferred vehicles of the younger set. Thus, BMW wants to bring in younger people to its fold—logically the future of the automotive market. To lure the younger set, BMW designed its 1 series. And just recently, BMW Philippines invited 12 motoring journalists to the Subic racetrack to unveil its first hatchback with rear wheel drive.

The 1 series may be a niche market in the Philippines but in Europe it is designed for a growing segment. It will not be BMW's biggest bestseller. That distinction still belongs to its 3-series, but BMW sees the 1 to be "very important" worldwide, where the average age of drivers is getting younger.

At first glance, BMW 1 Series looks like a lot of thought and hard work had been put into it. With its dynamic lines, the hatchback looks in motion even at a standstill.

It carries BMW's typical proportions—a long wheelbase (the longest wheelbase of its class at 2.88 meters) for stability and driving pleasure and a short body overhang that ensures the car will react and respond instantly to the driver's input behind the wheel.

BMW 1 Series boasts of a drag coefficient of .29 and is being flaunted as having the best possible aerodynamic design in the compact class.

Optional packages

The trunk volume looks apt. The driver can even personalize the car. One can customize the car with optional packages like sport, executive, tech and individual. It is also equipped with bluetooth technology and keyless entry. BMW stresses that these features are normally reserved for cars of much higher values.

Another function notable in the 1 Series is the MP3 connection. Those with iPods can hook up their system through the car. A hi-fi professional sound system does wonders to enhance the driving experience. Its xenon headlights come with double rings.

'Neutral' car

Its 50-50 weight distribution (front and rear) guarantees a "neutral" car. This even distribution of axle load makes the 1 Series react to sudden changes of direction with smoothness and stability.

The full front suspension is made of aluminum, the rear of steel. The front axle is designed in a double-joint tension rod spring

FORD Philippines now offers a complete lineup of SUVs catering to different market segments.

EDDIE BAUER TRIMS LAUNCHED

Ford Philippines completes SUV lineup

Text and photos by Charles E. Buban

IN ITS 84-year history, Eddie Bauer has evolved from a single store in downtown Seattle to a trichannel company with more than 600 stores in the United States, Canada, Germany and Japan, 100 million catalogues and online websites.

The company is known for its outdoor-inspired casual wear brand offering distinctive clothing, accessories and home furnishings for men and women that reflect a modern interpretation of the company's unique outdoor heritage.

So, what has Eddie Bauer got to do with the vehicles of Ford Motor Co?

Looking at the company's historical timeline, it was in 1983 when Eddie Bauer began its partnership with Ford to produce Eddie Bauer Edition Ford vehicles.

Started in 1984

"The first Eddie Bauer Edition Ford rolls off the assembly line in 1984 and since then, this model trim has combined premium luxury appointments to satisfy Ford buyers who are always wanting more," revealed Ford Philippines president Henry Co before he bade goodbye to the media group that went to Punta Puego (in Nasugbu, Batangas) to test drive the 2005 Eddie Bauer model trims of the Explorer and Expedition.

The two new premium models complete and strengthen Ford's lineup of SUVs on the Philippine market.

Said Co: "The 2005 Eddie Bauer model trims of the Explorer and Expedition are testament to the company's continued growth and presence in the country since it started operations way back in 1997. They signal that we are here to stay as the top choice for many Filipinos."

Superb appointments

Just like the Eddie Bauer company creed that states: "To give (customers) such outstanding quality, value, service and guarantee that we may be worthy of (their) high esteem," the two new Explorer and Expedition trims carried superb appointments to separate them from the other model trims.

The 2005 4x4 Expedition Eddie Bauer is powered by a 5.4-liter single overhead cam Triton V8 engine (compared to the 4.6-liter SOHC Triton V8 Engine of the XLT 4x2 model trim), a 4-wheel drive Control Trac System (shift-on-the-fly), and a 4-speed automatic transmission with overdrive.

The P2.795-million full-size SUV's notable features include a Powerfold third row seat, second row Centerside seat, a 17-inch machined-aluminum wheels, Quad-beam headlamps, Arizona-beige lower-body side moldings, wheel-lip moldings and bumpers.

The latest Expedition comes in oxford white, medium wedgewood blue, estate green and black hues.

4-liter engine

The 2005 4x4 Explorer Eddie Bauer, on the other hand, is powered by a 4-liter SOHC sequential electronic fuel injection 12-V V6 engine, a similar 4-wheel drive Control Trac System (shift-on-the-fly), and a 5-speed automatic transmission with overdrive.

"Since its introduction in 1990, the Ford Explorer has changed the face of the SUV market here in the Philippines: it has proven that rugged, truck-like functionality and off-road durability could be combined with style, luxury and comfort," said Co.

Safety and functionality have been the hallmarks of the Ford Explorer.

Co revealed the mid-size SUV was named America's "Most Trusted SUV" for 12 years, Best Pick by the US Insurance Institute for Highway Safety and Best-In-Class for front crash-test performance by the US National Highway Safety Administration.

Best-selling SUV

"These recognitions are the reasons Ford Explorer has remained America's best-selling SUV for 13 years and has inspired Ford to be always a step ahead in providing its customers what they want in an SUV in terms of power, safety and comfort," he said.

To readily identify the 2005 4x4 Explorer Eddie Bauer, the SUV features a 17-inch Sparkle silver-painted cast-aluminum wheels fitted with all-terrain tires, Pueblo Gold two-tone exterior accents, stain-nickel grille, and heated side-view mirrors.

The P2.295-million Explorer comes in dark stone metallic, red fire metallic, oxford white and black.

Online bidding of vanity license plates mounted for LTO

BAYANTRADE—the region's premier sourcing, procurement and supply chain services provider—will enable the online bidding of 63 limited edition vanity license plates (VLP), which are expected to earn for the Land Transportation Office (LTO) a minimum of P3.15 million.

The bidding project, which will be conducted from Nov. 24 to Dec. 9, will be jointly undertaken by BayanTrade with Digital Paradise Inc., the owner of more than 120 Netopia Internet Cafés nationwide and Stradcom Corp., which manages the computerization of the LTO's operations and processes.

Electronic bidding

Under the agreement, BayanTrade will provide LTO and bid participants access to its leading electronic bidding facility. The system is one of the foremost e-Sourcing technologies on the market which provides real-time, transparent and dynamic price movement of every bid event.

It is hosted in a premier data center, which ensures the reliability, availability and security of the data and connectivity. It is also web-based, which allows bid participants to submit and resubmit bids anytime, anywhere.

Through this facility, BayanTrade will structure the bid with qualified bidders being given a password-protected username, which they will use to bid for a maximum of five vanity license plates each, as stipulated in the LTO's requirements. Bids will begin at P50,000 for each plate and can move up at a minimum increment of P2,000 with a provision that ensures there will be no tied bids. Tomorrow, closing of the bids for the 63 plates will be staggered where lots of four to six plates will close every 45 minutes.

Training sessions

BayanTrade will also provide training sessions to LTO, Strad-

com and Netopia on how to support bid participants when they submit and view their own set of posted bids.

Training will also be given to a select group of LTO personnel on how to monitor the ongoing bid event, focusing on participation, trends and leading bidders.

Wider access

According to BayanTrade's president and COO Dante M. Briones, online bidding can benefit both the LTO and its bidders as this will promote wider access for bidders, transparency of the bidding process and potentially generate higher revenues for the LTO.

Briones said the online bidding will make it more convenient for bidders since they can participate in the comfort of their own homes or at a Netopia branch near them, which allows even bidders in the provinces to take part in the bid process. It also assures bidders of transparency since they will be able to view competitive bids while still remaining confidential through generic usernames assigned to each of them to protect their identities.

Online bidding also benefits the LTO, which wants to see a spike in the number of bidders who will participate in the agency's revenue-generating venture.

Vanity plates

A total of 105 limited edition vanity license plates were up for auction since September. Of these, 42 were sold during an initial manual auction, which leaves 63 pieces of limited edition VLP for the online public bidding.

The vanity plates consist of four to six identical characters, either letters or numerals, which are up for bid at a base price of P50,000 each, are exempted from the government's color-coding scheme or unified vehicle volume reduction program (UVVRP).

strut suspension featuring a stabilizer bar, meaning it exhibits the stiffness needed as the car performs. Why is the rear not made of aluminum? 1 Series makers say the car needs the weight in the rear to guarantee the 50-50 weight distribution (and to neutralize the engine weight up front). The newly developed five-link rear suspension has straight rod-shaped and short lever arms and a stiff structure, the lightweight steel construction enables a particular accurate wheel guidance.

The four-cylinder 1 Series is available from 85 kW (115bhp) for the BMW 116i to 110kW (150bhp) for the BMW 120i. The 120i features valvetronic fully variable valve control. Both the variants have double vanos variable camshaft control boasting supreme acceleration in upper speed ranges and for optimized fuel economy when partially loaded.

It has 16-inch wheels equipped with standard run-flat tires. And because of this, the makers find no use for a spare tire. The 17-inch wheels are also available for sports suspension models. BMW Philippines is also providing 18-inch wheels for those who love it even bigger.

Tests

At the tracks for the slalom and moose tests, the BMW 1 series revealed its handling capabilities.

The 1 Series unit this writer used—a 116i—was not yet equipped with the sports suspension. While driving it, the stiffness was not evident but the car already handled well, particularly at the slalom test.

The moose test—an evasive mode test—was performed next. The evasive mode is when you don't step on the brakes but you just suddenly swerve to your left or right at 60 to 70 kph (a professional race car driver even swerved at 100 kph). This test simulates a situation in country roads when a big animal (in Western countries, a moose) suddenly crosses the road and tests how the driver avoids it without skidding or falling off the road.

At the speed that this writer went—at 70 kph—the 116i proved very controllable. Try that in another car and chances are you'll spin and face where you came from, not a very good view when you're being tailgated by another car in a public road.

After the track run, this writer surmised that it was, indeed, an ideal everyday car that would still appeal to a specific niche market.

With its price and limited production, the 1 Series, after all, is not intended for everyone.

Speaking of interior roominess, the car can also accommodate up to five adults. The 1, though, is not really meant for heavy loads, and though it holds its own in the rough roads, it runs best on highways and city roads.

BMW confirms that it is "stretching the brand downward." But, it says, it would not imperil any of its brand values. In fact, next year BMW promises to introduce what it calls a "fabulous" 3-Series complementary to the 1 series.

Targets

BMW says it targets the single, 25 to 35 age range (male and female) with sizable incomes. The 1 Series also targets young couples, specifically well-traveled ones, who enjoy the perks of a dual income and who have a common passion and zest in life. It represents the practicality of an everyday car but also allows for an expression of individuality and indulges its owner to the passion of driving.

For those who have P1.5 to P2.1 million to spare, and who would want a European hatch on the garage and to show off at parties, this is the One.

Diesel

By Andre Palma

THE IMAGE conjured up by diesel engines is of decrepit public utility vehicles, accelerating out of MMMA-approved transport stops, cutting three lanes to the left, and covering the entire roadway with an acrid black cloud that would leave members of Her Majesty's Secret Service with smoke screen envy. Diesel is perceived as the fuel of the masses. It is cheaper than gasoline, so it must be inferior.

COMMENTARY

In the process of refining, isn't diesel the stuff at the bottom of the distillation tank, while the good stuff, like cream, floats to the top? Performance must therefore solely be the realm of gasoline-powered engines. I mean, how can it be anything else but gospel truth, as red Italian sports cars and their nth time World Champion endorser clutter the billboards of our highways and fill our minds with the their petroleum propaganda? Gasoline is admittedly the more glamorous of the two fuels, but is it necessarily superior to diesel?

Alternative to gas engines

We have to put the humble diesel engine into perspective. Rudolf Diesel, in 1892, was able to patent the idea for running a more efficient alternative to the gasoline engines of the time and it hinged on the use of an alternative fuel. His namesake fuel packs more energy than gasoline. In BTUs (British Thermal Units, or the amount of heat energy required to raise the temperature of one pound of water by one degree Fahrenheit), one gallon (3.8 liters) of diesel has, on average 147,000 BTUs. Since this measurement is in energy, this can

TOYOTA

Toyota has learned from the roads of the world. And that's why we can make our promise.

The roads of the world are many and varied. So are the world's voices when it comes to the vehicle. There are just so many different ways people live with it. And sometimes these voices have contradictory demands, making it difficult to build what they ask for. But now Toyota has made it possible with no compromises.

The aim was to satisfy the wishes of all. Only those who truly know the roads of the whole world can gain the approval of the whole world. Toyota's promise of total renewal—given shape in a new, global-quality vehicle. It's now ready for you to enjoy.

Getting high on Hi-Lux

IT WAS a big thrill watching the unveiling of the all-new Toyota Hi-Lux on Saturday at the famous The Fontana in Clark, Angeles City, Pampanga. When it comes to launching vehicles, Toyota is without equal.

The new Hi-Lux is a revelation in many ways.

One, Toyota retaining the Hi-Lux and improving it all the more is a testimony to the enduring legacy of the pickup. My son's first vehicle is a Hi-Lux, which he bought in 1997. He has yet to buy a new one to add to his old, reliable Hi-Lux. For, as far as I know, his Hi-Lux is still in great shape. I think he will never let go of it—for sentimental reasons.

Two, the new Hi-Lux is considered the first main model of the world-renowned IMV (Innovative Multipurpose Vehicle). It's actually more than that. As Raymond Rodriguez said, "Its original acronym was IMV which means International Innovative Multipurpose Vehicle. It's been shortened to IMV for easier pronunciation."

***

Basically, when a vehicle is classified as an IMV, it is capable of traversing all kinds of roads and terrains and can be, like a golf course in the modern-day era, an all-weather (vehicle).

The new Toyota Hi-Lux qualifies under that and the Philippines gets the distinction of being the second country in Asia, if not the world, to have such kind of a vehicle. Lucky are those who would buy the new Hi-Lux shortly, for they will experience a totally different ride in this era of The Polar Express and iPod. (Yes, Albert and Loi, I dread that day when I wasn't around when you put that wondrous piece of technology up for grabs during the Volvo party. Hu-hu-hu!)

As Nobuharu Tabata said, during the

Hi-Lux launch: "I am proud to be part of this magnificent technology as its launch here in the Philippines spells a new dimension in the ever-expanding automotive industry. Toyota is proud to be the leader in this aspect again."

The Hi-Lux launch, indeed, was a smash hit in that even the engineer who crafted the new Hi-Lux was brought here all the way from Japan. His name escapes me at the moment but his face is a familiar one, having seen him a lot of times during my trips with Toyota in the biennial, very-much admired Tokyo Motor Show. His discourse on the features of the well-chiseled Hi-Lux received a warm applause from an appreciative audience that stayed on late into the night, what with sashimi and sushi filling tables endlessly and wine and cognac flowing freely on strict orders of Ariel de Jesus, Toyota's indefatigable pointman. Boy, did I see Vince Socco turn from diplomat to director when Ariel The Angel missed out on sake.

THE OVERALL interior design concept is a combination of car-like features that exceeds pickup standards.

"But not to worry, sir," said Ariel The Angel. "The cognac will more than make up for the absence of sake."

To that, Danny "Sir John" Isla could only nod approvingly.

Oh, yes, Danny! I call him "Sir John" because he is Toyota's John Lennon. His speech again during the launch proved once more that he is a Beatlemania; "When I'm 64," done to the tune of "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town," was played right after his talk.

Said Danny I: "The Hi-Lux's new look combines ruggedness and boldness with style and sophistication.... This new Hi-Lux will attract both the yuppies and the mature adults not only for its functional diversity but also for its looks which can elevate the user's self-esteem and overall image. As we love to say: 'Madaming pogi po' ito. Today's launch marks a new beginning but it also serves as an aggressive ending to the year 2004 when Toyota continued to reign supreme in the automotive industry."

Even Takemoto-san, Vince Socco's boss in the Toyota offices for the Toyota's Southeast Asian region of operations in Singapore, was moved by Danny I's speech that he stood up clapping lustily. Nice one, Danny I.

Even if I'm not around in the Henry Ford Awards on Dec. 10, Angelle de Guzman of Ogilvy Public Relations Worldwide knows that in spirit, I'm there. Congratulations to the winners!

QUOTE ME. Instead of honking your horn to signal the vehicle in front of you to give way, just overtake it. That way, you preserve peace in your mind, and also the environs.

Honda RP delegation grand slam winner in regional technicians championship

AL Brijueda of Honda Cars Makati Inc. took home top honor, in the recently concluded 8th Asia-Oceania technician contest (AOTC) in Thailand, besting other Honda technicians in the Asia and Oceania region.

This event gives service technicians the chance to show their outstanding skills and knowledge while sharing them among fellow technicians from countries in the region.

The previous AOTC venue was in Japan, with local Honda's contender also emerging as champion. Past champions include Moises Ingles of Honda Cars Shaw (2002) and Arnold Bergola of Honda Cars Quezon City (2000).

Motivating technicians

AOTC is designed to motivate Honda technicians and promote various service programs of Asia and Oceania's service division. Participants of the event are technicians representing Honda distributors from Australia, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Singapore, Thailand, Taiwan and the Philippines.

Tests on knowledge and practical skills are prepared for the individual and pair categories, which are geared toward the advancement of Honda technicians. The two categories also give way to improve technical expertise not only as individuals, but as team members as well. However, Honda customers emerged as the ultimate victors as they are the main beneficiaries when skillful technicians attend to their vehicles.

This year's delegation is composed of Brijueda, Joel Pagaduan (Honda Cars Makati), John Badion Jr. (Honda Cars Pangasinan), Manuel Mercado (Honda Cars Pasig) and Albert Teneros (Honda Cars Philippines Inc.).

Message

Satoshi Tashida, Honda Motor Co. Ltd. managing director and CEO for regional operations, applauds the outstanding technicians. Says Tashida in his message: "The present automobile industry is facing with extremely severe competition and we are seeing a dramatic reorganization in this field as companies merge to take advantage of the economies of scale. On the other hand, the severe business climate offers considerable opportunity for growth and expansion of business."

Against this backdrop, he says Honda continues to aim for the enhancement of customer satisfaction. "If we achieve a high level of customer satisfaction, however, we cannot stand on our laurels but must aim for an even higher level of service, a level that exceeds the expectations of our customers," he adds.

THE PHILIPPINE delegation is composed of Brijueda, Joel Pagaduan (Honda Cars Makati), John Badion Jr. (Honda Cars Pangasinan), Manuel Mercado (Honda Cars Pasig) and Albert Teneros (Honda Cars Philippines Inc.).

100 karters participate in Arthur Tuason Memorial Cup

THE 5TH Arthur Tuason Memorial Cup recently lived up to its billing as the biggest karting event of the year at the Manila Speedzone, Fort Bonifacio Global City, as 100 participants signed up for the race for the benefit of the Mabuhay Deseret Foundation, which helps arrange treatment for less fortunate kids who are born with minor deformities and are in need of corrective surgery.

After the rigorous qualifying time trials and prequalifying heats, the final races provided lots of excitement for the crowd in attendance, which included Smart head of personal communications and mobile services Boy Martinez,

Division winners

Taking victory in the Goodyear Media and VIP division was Manila Times' Brian Afuang ahead of second placer Manny de los Reyes of Gadgets and Standard Insurance's Seymour Sakdavia. The Ford Cader division was topped by Tom Joson, who was followed home by Rafael Benito and Juha Turalba.

Norman Agojo was first across the line followed by Mark Beton and the piggyback tandem of Bunchy Mayuga and Michael Beton in Goodyear Fun Run. In the Addict Novice Light division, it was Philippine Star's Jeff Reyes who took the plum as well as the Red Horse Beer Fastest Lap Award ahead of Jonathan Dael and Vic Icasas. The Addict Novice Heavy division was annexed by James Co, who was trailed by Andrew Gutierrez and Toti Turalba.

In the exciting Standard Insurance Expert Light division, Marlon Stockinger emerged victorious in the face of a hard challenge from Indy Villalon and Jonathan Dael. Raymond Ronquillo took the top of the podium ahead of Marcel Thanu and Gibson Yu in the Standard Insurance Expert Heavy division.

Organizer, sponsors

Organized by the Tuason Racing School, which is headed by JP Tuason, the Arthur Tuason Memorial Cup is an annual kart race for a cause, which is held in honor of the late motor racing legend Arthur Tuason.

It is sponsored by Standard Insurance, Ford, Addict Mobile, Amhi Pur Car, Goodyear tires, Kenwood, Red Horse Beer, CI magazine, trapik.com, Magic 89.9, Oakley, Adidas and Casio G-shock.

Diesel

then be translated into the very familiar unit of the Dieter's calorie (technically a kilo-calorie, but who's counting) and the factor is 1 BTU = 0.251996 Dieter's calories. Therefore a gallon of diesel would pack a total of 37,043.41 calories or 9748.27 calories per liter!

Gasoline on the other hand would have an average of 125,000 BTUs per gallon, translating into 31,499.5 calories with 8289.34 calories per liter. This is one reason we get better mileage from diesel when comparing equivalent engines, as it packs, literally, more "bang for buck." With this concentrated energy comes a higher viscosity or thickness, and an elevated boiling point compared to gasoline. The lighter less concentrated stuff, like gasoline, floats. To further dispel the "bottom of the barrel" myth, diesel is actually found somewhere in the middle of the distillation tank (or column), carbon residue and lubricants are the true "bottom dwellers" in this case.

How can we say that diesel is a more efficient source of power than gas, if we see, almost on a daily basis, inefficiently burnt fuel coming out of the tailpipes of both dilapidated PUVs and multi-million-peso SUVs? It all comes down to the basic design and level of maintenance of all diesel engines.

Inherent flaw

By design, diesel engines live on compression and the ability to achieve immense levels of compression (sometimes twice that of their gasoline counterparts) over and over again. Unlike gasoline, diesel only relies on the heat generated by the intense compression of the fuel and air mixture to achieve combustion. This delicate mixture of diesel, air and pressure must be meticulously balanced to get a complete or clean burn. In this system also lies the inherent flaw of the diesel engine, and ultimately the cause of smoke belching. Imagine trying to manufacture a chamber that is both able to withstand compression forces and expansion forces several thousand times a minute.

How about trying to make this leak proof for three years or the next 100,000 kilometers, whichever comes first? We can only hope to delay the process of degradation, and this comes with fanatical religious preemptive maintenance. Have your vehicle compression tested once smoke becomes evident. Also have the injectors checked, as blockages may occur due to low-quality diesel. Try to load the new breed of "clean diesels" that are available on the market from the major oil companies. If your favorite brand doesn't carry a new and improved diesel, then ask them why they do not.

Bright future

The future looks bright for this overlooked fuel. Manufacturers have been designing engines that take advantage of the high-powered punch of diesel and its innate efficiency. Common Rail Diesel Injection systems, that use computer controlled pre, main and post injectors, married to pressure accumulator—the "rail," perfect the delivery, pressure and volumes of air and fuel for combustion, resulting in some "better than gasoline" driving experiences.

Locally, some brands are beginning to sell this technology, capitalizing on the "both frugal and fun" concept. Most of the motoring public will agree with the frugal bit of the sales pitch, but can diesel really be more fun than gas? Let's just say the next time you find yourself at a stoplight next to a new 5 series Bimmer, you better think twice. Most likely, all you'll get is a long frustrating look at its rear end and the little letter "d" after the numbers five, three, zero.

Know more about good car maintenance

NOWADAYS, the average age of vehicles on the road is greater than nine years and more than 68 percent of vehicles have run more than 75,000 miles.

As a vehicle's engine ages, its performance decreases and oil starts to break down at a faster rate. Over time, seals begin to deteriorate, gaskets become brittle and oil consumption increases. All these lead to a reduction in engine performance.

But don't feel too bad. There are ways to squeeze out more efficiency and performance from your car with a little TLC. Just remember these car maintenance tips, courtesy of 3M's Car Care Cloth.

- Make sure you change oil every three months or 3,000 miles whichever comes first. Think of your engine as the heart of your car and motor oil as the lifeblood of your engine. One can't function without the other, so pay attention to your "change-oil" schedule.

- Schedule regular tune-ups. Even if your car seems fine, it's no guarantee that it is. Tune-ups will ensure that your car's major components are running smoothly and that they stay that way. Change your oil, check your tires and rotate them if necessary. Check the belts and replace them if broken. Inspect brake linings, spark plugs, air filter and fuel aspects.

- Have your tire pressure checked at least once a month. It's the best way to prevent unexpected flats. Also make sure to rotate your tires and check their alignment as part of your regular tune-up.

- Pay attention to every little thump, weird hum or "ping" that you hear. Cars, like people, have their peculiarities and you are sure to quickly learn what is normal for yours. It is best to check out any symptom—be it a sound, smell or feeling. Remember: An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

- Pay attention to outward signs. If your car is leaking fluids, it can mean serious trouble. Keep an eye on the conditions of your driveway or regular parking space for stains or spots that can warn you about possible leaks.

- Find a good mechanic. If you don't do your own maintenance, find a shop with a good mechanic that will give you peace of mind about matters concerning your car. Consider him your car's "personal physician."

- Check fluids regularly. It's dangerous for your car to get dehydrated, so be sure to keep an eye on its vital fluids.

- Store your car properly. Storing your vehicle in a dry temperature location when it is not in use will prevent disastrous wear and tear on both its interior and exterior. Keep your car in the garage as much as possible to protect its look.

- Stay on top of safety features. Nothing is more important than your car's ability to protect both you and your passengers. Airbags, antilock brakes and any other additional safety features that you may have added to your car should be carefully checked on regular basis to ensure that in the event of an accident, they will perform their vital, lifesaving functions.

- Make sure your car's interior and exterior are clean and organized. 3M's Car Care Cloth can help you take care of this. This thermo-bonded, nonwoven wiping cloth is designed for general cleaning operations inside and outside your car. The cloth absorbs nine times its dry weight so you don't have to worry about wringing it frequently. It is soft, flexible and easy to squeeze dry. It's also scratch-free so you don't have to worry about damaging your car's body or windshield. You can use it wet or dry. Keep one handy in your car for major or touch-up jobs.

Ford caps year with road safety concerns

TO MARK Ford's drive for a safer world, Ford Philippines caps 2004 with a special event for its customers and the public on Saturday. Dubbed "Road Safety is no Accident," the event will include activities that aim to increase awareness on road safety.

Said Henry Co, president of Ford Group Philippines: "When we began Ford Day last year, it was to celebrate our centennial year. This year's Ford Day is to again thank our customers and the public for the support that has made 2004 exciting for Ford. Early this year we launched the Ford Road Safety campaign and today, we want to reinforce Ford's commitment to road safety by communicating its importance to the family via this activity."

Ford Day 2004 promises to be yet another exciting day packed with activities for the whole family and is made even bigger with the inclusion of the Volvo, Jaguar and Land Rover, which are brands under the Ford family.

Safety firsts exhibit

The Ford's Safety Firsts exhibit is a showcase of Ford's commitment to road safety through the years, which includes information on Ford's safety innovations.

- Amazing road race. Eight teams will race to complete 8 road safety pitstops with the best time using road safety clues.

- Baby Drive My Car (RC Challenge). Baby Drive My Car is an exciting remote control car-racing contest. Two remote controlled cars are set up to race through a road safety track. The competition is open to 20-30 participants who sign up upon registration.

Ford Day activities

Kids are sure to learn a lot about road safety with the "Pin the Ford Oval," which is open to kids 10 years old and below. The "Road Sign-making" contest, meanwhile, is open to kids 10-15 years old.

Lastly, the Ford Day would not be complete without the parade of Ford vehicles from past to present and other vehicles under the Ford Family such as the Volvo, Jaguar and Land Rover. The Ford motorcade will go around The Fort and Makati.

To make the Ford Day even more exciting, prizes will be raffled off hourly beginning 11:30 a.m. The grand raffle winner will get a trip for three to Boracay.

Ford will also award Ford road safety stickers to the winners of the predrawn raffle.

Live-band performance and fireworks will cap the Ford Day celebration. The event will also showcase some pocket activities: Ford vehicle test drives, display of the latest vehicle offerings of Ford, Mazda, Jaguar, Land Rover and Volvo, safety clinics to be conducted by Tusson Racing, Goodyear, Standard Insurance and Pilipinas Shell and food bars. A 10-point vehicle checkup will also be available to Ford and Mazda owners.

Singapore hosts world-class motor show

Manila sets similar show

By Ulysses Ang
Contributor

THE GLITZ and glamour of an international motor show has an effect that echoes past the confines of the exhibition hall. More often than not, motor shows such as those in Tokyo, Detroit and Geneva are gauges of current and future market trends—places where car manufacturers take the pulse of the consumers and vice versa. And, for all the talk about the latest shebang that was launched in a motor show half a world away, it's funny that Southeast Asia only has one world-renowned show: Bangkok. Well, maybe two.

With Bangkok fast becoming a major center of car production in the region, it's no surprise that manufacturers such as Ford and Isuzu would show their latest wares there. However, what about the other car makes whose manufacturing plants are still based in Europe, and whose clientele are much more affluent? There's the Singapore Motor Show.

Milestone for organizers

Despite Singapore's diminutive size, the country commands a high market potential for luxury goods, including cars and motorbikes. It's no question that when the exhibition hall opened for the 7th Singapore Motor Show, only the best of the best would be exhibited. This year marks a milestone of sorts for the organizers of the Singapore Motor Show with over a hundred exhibitors present. This year's theme, "Drive the Future" couldn't have been more appropriate with the presence of world-class concepts from the members of the Japanese Automobile Manufacturer's Association (Jama) as well as sneak peek at future showroom-ready offerings.

There's no lacking in exotics this year with various examples, some shown for the first time in the Asian market. Among the highlights are the all-new Porsche Boxster and Carrera GT, Lamborghini Murcielago Roadster, Maserati Quattroporte, Rolls-Royce Phantom and 100EX.

Great cars

There are also some great cars from east and west with the presence of the 7th generation

Chevrolet Corvette and SSR pickup, Mazda RX-8, Nissan 350Z Roadster, Petter Seiberg's Subaru Impreza WRC and Honda S2000 Mk II as well as a preview of the upcoming Mitsubishi Evolution IX and Cole MIVEC Turbo.

Family cars became the show's main come-on though, virtually transforming the exhibition hall into one giant showroom featuring the face-lifted Honda CR-V and Odyssey, all-new Nissan Cefiro and Latio, Chevrolet Optra 5-door, Peugeot 307CC and 407SW.

Giving the motor show some high-tech twists are some concept cars such as the Honda HSC Concept, Saab 9-X, Suzuki C2 Concept, Toyota CS&S and Fine N.

As high-tech as most showcases could be, Mercedes-Benz, a first-time exhibitor decided to turn back the clock with their collection of six museum-quality classics dubbed "Shining Silver Star Collection." Among them are the 1886 Benz Patent Car, the 1924 28/95 hp—the first car known as Mercedes, and the decisively aerodynamic 1939 Mercedes-Benz 320 "streamliner."

If the cars didn't provide enough entertainment, carnivals gave their utmost best in entertaining the crowd with various mini shows and raffles. Mazda brought down the house with their "Zoom Zoom" girls dance show, while Toyota had a family-friendly atmosphere complete with clowns and balloons. The main highlight though is a Subaru Impreza stunt show done by Guinness Book of World Records holder for fastest parallel parker, Russ Swift.

With the Singapore Motor Show already through as you read this, you'll have to wait another two years for the next one to arrive. However, there's always a more affordable alternative. For the first time ever, Manila will be hosting a motor show of its own with a similar scope and depth. Worldbex International will be raising the curtains on the first-ever Manila Motor Show on April 28 next year.

Interested parties who want to inquire about the Manila Motor Show may contact Worldbex International Inc. at (632) 531-6374, 531-6350, 533-6988. Please look for Jik Ang.

Gas-saving tips you need to know

IT SEEMS that before current gas prices can go down, they will first go up, thanks to the uncertain situation in the Middle East.

Motorists have cause to complain, but then again, what can they do? Unless the political fortunes in that part of the world change drastically, fuel-bound economies will just have to grin and bear it. Or cope with the situation by finding ways to reduce consumption.

Nomad Car Mat by 3M, are made with revolutionary loops that absorb dust and spurs so the car's interior never gets wet or dirty.

Helpful hints

3M offers some helpful ideas from Mary Hunt of Everyday Cheapskate, an online savings column, that will reduce gas consumption and help motorists cope with the tough times.

Nomad suggests that motorists undertake various conservation measures, no matter how small. They will all add up in the long run and result in savings. Here's how:

- Lighten the load. More weight in the car eats up more gas. Try to get your vehicle as light as possible. Unload everything from the trunk except spare tire, jack and other safety equipment. Don't use the trunk for storage. The extra load in the trunk could be the equivalent weight of another person, or more! Unloading 50 to 200 pounds of extra weight could pick up an additional two to three miles per gallon.

- Check the tires. The harder your engine has to work to get the car to and from destinations, the more gas it's going to use. If tires are improperly inflated, they don't roll as easily as they should and create a drag. Check the owner's manual for proper inflation measured in pounds per square inch (psi). Whenever you fill up, take the time to check all four tires and inflate them if needed.

- Buy the cheapest gas.

Name-brand gas is no better than discount gas. Cheaper is not inferior because all gas pass government permits and standards. Go for the cheapest station in town.

- Buy the right grade. Unless your car specifically requires high-octane gas (check the manual), buy regular gas. Using a higher, more expensive grade than specified will not really improve mileage or protect your engine.

- Gauge your speed. Travel steadily at the legal speed limit and chances are, the traffic lights will work to your advantage because they're timed to match traffic flow. Increase your chances of getting "green lights" all the way and save on fuel.

- Watch your speed. The speed at which you drive your car has a huge effect on fuel consumption. Driving at 105 kph instead of 88 kph can use up to 17 percent more fuel. Use cruise control whenever you can, especially on highways. By maintaining a steady speed, you will improve your gas mileage. Listen. For every mile per hour over 55, you lose 2 percent in fuel economy. That means that if you get 30 mpg at 55, it drops to 27 at 97 kph and all the way down to 21 mpg at 70.

- Use overdrive. If your car's transmission has overdrive, use it. It's like the fourth gear and was designed to conserve on fuel.

- One-minute rule. Don't allow your engine to idle for longer than one minute. If you're going to stay in the same spot longer than that, you'll save fuel by turning off the engine.

- Plan ahead. Do all your errands at the same time. Plan ahead so you take care of all your errands in one trip.

- Team up. Carpooling is something we must now take seriously. Instead of everyone in the neighborhood driving to the same school or work area at the same time, form a group. This could be profitable in more ways than one.

Jeep 'virus' in the Philippines

THERE'S an incurable "virus" rolling across the country.

It's the kind that keeps its victim awake and anxious in the dead of night, hands quivering, and seeing visions of military jeeps driving around in their unadorned splendor back in World War II. The condition is alleviated only as soon as the victim sneaks into the garage and starts tinkering with a mountain of spare parts. Out of this heap of metal scraps will rise an M38 or a Willys MB.

The subject gets an unexplained urge to scour old warehouses in Cavite, Pampanga and nearby towns for even the smallest of screws. His conversations are peppered with the words chassis skid plate and clamp front. He considers the 1940s as the most interesting period in history. Winning the war and driving the Japanese away was only a secondary reason he's grateful to the US Army, foremost is the fact that it brought the military jeeps—the forerunner of today's ubiquitous PUJ—to Philippine soil.

If you've had a prolonged exposure to people exhibiting these symptoms, you too could be afflicted with...the Jeep "Virus."

Close encounters

At the first-ever convention of their kind at the Double-Deck RestoGrille on Ortigas Avenue, the men, aged 21 to 75, declared undying love for their passion.

Organized by the Philippine Jeep Preservation Foundation, the occasion gathered jeep enthusiasts from diverse backgrounds and professions, with only their devotion for the jeep as the common denominator. They arrived from Pampanga, Cavite, Bulacan and parts of Metro Manila via a motorcade aboard their gleaming masterpieces.

Later, after the agenda for the day had been properly dispensed with, the jeep comrades surveyed each other's vehicles like kids inspecting each other's toys. Much later, over chilled bottles of beer and plates full of putangin they still talk about jeeps. No wonder author Ambrosio Makabintal, himself a certified jeep fanatic and considered as one of the foremost experts on the subject, co-wrote a book titled "Jeep, Jeep, Jeep." These men seemed eager to discuss nothing else.

"Military jeeps are war relics. They're part of the country's colorful history. Restoring a jeep to its old glorious self is like pinning a jigsaw puzzle; you feel thrilled as everything falls into place. It rouses deep pride in you," explained Makabintal, who owns 12-14 of these units at any one time.

And proud, they indeed are. These military jeeps are considered rubbish of war, and the fact that Filipinos were able to restore or recondition them is proof of the famed Pinoy ingenuity.

Said MD Juan events coordinator Jo Ampil: "The restorers tell us it's like you're the king of the road when you're driving a vintage military jeep because it attracts everybody's attention. The problem is, you sometimes feel like a second-class citizen. You are eclipsed by the jeep."

Because of his job, Ampil has also caught the jeep "virus" and is now into the same hobby himself.

Treasure hunting

And look at how far jeep restorers' passions take them. One jeep aficionado, Teng Agas, waxed romantic as he explained the pains they go through sourcing out original spare parts: "It's like a love-struck man pursuing the woman of his dreams even to the ends of the earth. You'll do anything, go anywhere, to find her." For the love of a hard-to-find screw no bigger than a 25-centavo coin, he and his four friends had to search an unused piggery in Pampanga after being tipped off that it was used as a dump for World War II stuff. Some parts they got from an old warehouse and a garage, and the rest they bought from MD Juan.

The group spent P250,000, including labor. Now, they're selling the jeep to a Japanese client for P600,000. It was worth all the trouble for a month's work, they said. Indeed, aside from being a fascinating pastime, jeep restoration can also be lucrative.

Non-profit group

A nonprofit organization affiliated with various clubs of jeep enthusiasts in Davao, Nueva Ecija, Ilocos Norte, Cebu, Bulacan and Pampanga, PJPF was formed to unify and accredit jeep aficionados in the country.

Apart from the beauty of getting acquainted with fellow jeep lovers from other places around the country (and soon, from other countries as well), PJPF members—through the group's global connections—may also acquire jeep equipment and spare parts that are otherwise difficult to acquire locally.

The organization also reaches new enthusiasts the ins and outs of jeep restoration and helps them appraise which part of their jeep is original, how much restoration work should be done, and the costs.

PJPF had originally set its sights on promoting military jeep restoration for leisure and profit, but as more and more people expressed their desire to sign up, however, the goal took on other heights: the country is now being groomed as the jeep capital of Asia.

"We are banking on the fact that jeep restoration as a hobby is gaining a cult following in the country. On the surface, it may seem just an ego-booster, to attract attention. But in reality, the passion runs deep," said Rommel Juan, executive director of PJPF.

Juan, who is also the vice president for marketing of MD Juan Enterprises Inc., the only source in Southeast Asia of historically accurate, hard-to-find jeeps and replacement parts, bared at the convention that PJPF will soon be linking up with international organizations of jeep enthusiasts. The intent is to promote its members as an authority on jeep restoration, and to drum up exposure of this world-class Pinoy craft. In fact, the convention is meant to lay the groundwork for the first Pinoy jeep show at The Fort in April. The affair will gather jeep lovers all over the country. Hopefully, it will generate maximum media coverage, said Juan.

The convention was held in time for the 26th death anniversary of Dr. Maximino Dionisio Juan, the founder of MD Juan and Rommel's grandfather. Today, the second and third generations of Juans continue the legacy left by the MD Juan founder.

The military jeep which Dr. Juan fell in love with during World War II endured the roughest terrains and the rigors of war. Today, men from all walks of life have come together through PJPF to honor a rich part of our heritage and keep the faith in Pinoy craftsmanship alive.

THE TRAILBLAZER EXT's extended wheelbase provides ample room for seven passengers including driver.

The Trailblazer is a sport utility vehicle and, far from being trucklike, it offers a ride as comfortable and as quiet as that of a big car

Trailblazer

WHEN I FIRST heard about the Chevrolet Trailblazer (I missed the press launch), I thought it was a pickup truck. Even my visiting balikbayan brother from the United States remarked, "That's a truck!" when I told him I would be test-driving the Trailblazer.

How wrong we both were. The Trailblazer is a sport utility vehicle and, far from being trucklike, it offers a ride as comfortable and as quiet as that of a big car. Rude comfort, in fact, is one of the outstanding qualities of the 2004 Trailblazer, which was recently introduced by General Motors Philippines Inc. (GMPh). Chevrolet designed and built the Trailblazer in such a way that the cabin and passengers are isolated from road noise caused by bumps and potholes. Aside from enjoying quiet motoring, passengers

ON THE ROAD

are not jolted by uneven road surfaces as the Trailblazer literally floats over road bumps and potholes.

Although the Trailblazer is classified as a midsize SUV, the model offered by GMPh—the seven-seater EXT version with an extended wheelbase—looks like a full-size SUV, being 16 inches longer than the standard model. On the other hand, while the Trailblazer EXT appears to be longer than the Ford Expedition and Nissan Patrol, it is not as wide as either one.

Roomiest

The extended wheelbase makes the EXT the roomiest midsize SUV in the market since the rear seats are big enough to comfortably accommodate two fully grown, well-fed adults—not only children or pygmies. Even with the rear seats in position, 663 liters of cargo space are available behind. Moreover, the seatbacks of the second and third rows of seats can be folded forward in four different combinations to increase cargo space to as much as 3,030 liters.

With its seven-passenger seating capacity, carlike ride, quiet interior and smooth 4-speed automatic transmission, could the Trailblazer EXT be mistaken for a minivan or soccer mom mobile? The answer is Definitely Not, especially if you come face to face with the macho heft of the Trailblazer or witness its powerful performance on the road. The Trailblazer is equipped with the Vortec 4.2-liter, 24-valve, inline six, 275 HP/6,000 rpm powerplant that has been chosen as one of the Ten Best Engines by Ward's Autoworld, the prestigious US motor engineering journal. The towing hooks at the back are not just for show, either the Trailblazer's maximum pulling power is measured at 373 N-m torque/3,600 rpm.

Auto Trac 4WD

Other features that distinguish the Trailblazer from minivans/soccer mom mobiles are its Auto Trac 4WD, 17-inch wheels, skid plate and high-ground clearance—the EXT is 2.6 inches higher than the standard model. The suspension system—independent coil over shock with upper and lower control arms up front and five-link with coil springs at the rear—and a front stabilizer bar provide the cushy ride that is a cruising characteristic of big American SUVs.

However, although the Vortec 4200 straight six engine performs smoothly and quietly with excellent linear delivery, it is hampered by the EXT's 2247-kg curb weight. Quick acceleration and sporty handling are not that achievable in a Vortec 4200-powered Trailblazer EXT. For these driving thrills, you'll need the additional power supplied by the 5.3-liter V-8 engine option, but this is available only in the United States.

Compensated

The EXT's lack of agility is compensated somewhat by the creature comforts of its passenger cabin: dual zone aircon, 8-way power driver's seat, cruise control, tilt-adjustable steering column, leather-wrapped sport steering wheel, six-speaker AM/FM stereo with CD/cassette player, a built-in voice recorder, power windows with express down, power outlets, assist handles, coat hooks and deep tint glass. A full complement of safety features is standard, including two SRS airbags, 4-wheel disc brakes with ABS and power assist, 3-point seatbelts for all seating positions, halogen headlights, fog lamps, daytime running lights, security system with side guard door beams and remote keyless entry. GMPh claims that the US National Highway Safety Administration has given the EXT its highest 5-star safety rating.

In the last analysis, the Trailblazer's major edge over its seven-seater rivals is its price: P2,095,000—up by P100,000 from its introductory P1,995,000 price—but still lower than the V6 Ford Explorer (P2,295,000) and the 3.8-liter gasoline Mitsubishi Pajero (P2,350,000). With this price incentive, you should soon see more Trailblazers on the road.

TODAY'S BUMPER STICKER: Government's philosophy: If it ain't broke, fix it till it is.

(E-mail comments to asevilla@inquirer.com.ph)

EVEN with the rear seats in position, 633 liters of cargo space are available. The cargo shelf/cover is detachable and the rear and middle row of seats can be folded forward to increase cargo floor space to 3,030 liters.

IN THE COCKPIT are dual zone aircon, 8-way power driver's seat, cruise control, leather-wrapped sport steering wheel, six-speaker Bose audio system, a voice recorder and power everything.

Picanto: Kia's runaway bestseller

THE CAR that is eliciting a second look at parking lots and wowing them in showrooms is not your sleek, macho-looking SUV but really a diminutive, whit of a car—the Kia Picanto. Undoubtedly Kia's runaway bestseller this year, the Picanto is hot, so hot in fact that no sooner than a unit is displayed on the platform and it is already spoken for by the end of the day!

Felix J. Mabilog Jr., Columbian Autocar Corp. (CAC) executive vice president and COO, is quite elated. "We've really not expected the public reception to be this much. What we do know is that when we introduce the Picanto, we will have one salable car that can run abreast with some of the better-selling sedans now available on the market," he says. "But to expect something like this is overwhelming. Not during a fiscal crisis," Mabilog adds.

Soft launch

CAC initially brought in 150 units of the Picanto in September for its soft launch. These units were sold out in less than two weeks. It was also noted that customers were lining up in the showrooms to make reservations even before CAC could place a single ad in the newspapers or make a formal launch.

The key to Picanto's runaway charm and attraction is its lean price tag. At a little over P300,000, it is without doubt the cheapest sedan in the market today. Its 1.1-liter gasoline EFI 12-valve, 4-cylinder engine also promises to deliver sporty and dynamic performance and excellent fuel economy—about 26 kilometers to a liter of gas. No car model available in its range comes close in fuel savings, especially at a time when fuel prices are escalating.

Impressive car

"We have in the Picanto a really impressive car," Mabilog says. "Its compact design and style sensibilities appeal to young, active consumers. Start-up families will enjoy the flexibility with which the car can be used to fulfill a variety of needs. The Picanto can be an office car, a shopping car and a party car, with plenty of room to spare," Mabilog continues.

The Picanto showcases convenient features such as power steering and air-conditioner with micro air filter. It has a rear seat with double folding capacity, a door map pocket, a two-layer glove box, luggage under floor tray, cup holder, cell phone tray and ashtray. Picanto's roominess

Yamaha introduces first solo bike model

By Alex Pal
PDI Visayas Bureau

DUMAGUETE CITY—Yamaha recently launched its first solo bike model which it hopes would propel it back to the country's top slot in motorcycle distribution, a position it had held for 32 consecutive years.

Hybrid automatic

The Yamaha Mio, a hybrid automatic that promises to elevate the standards of a smooth and comfortable ride, was launched in Dumaguete City—dubbed as "the Motorcycle Capital of the Philippines"—in ceremonies held to coincide with the city's 56th charter anniversary.

"The Mio has a 115 cc engine with the power of a 125 cc while promising an economical range of up to 58 kilometers per liter under ideal conditions," said Angel Fararons, Norkis Yamaha's marketing manager for the Visayas and Mindanao.

The Mio is driven by the V-belt, used by big bikes like the Harley Davidson, while its Continuous Variable Transmission (CVT) uses the same technology as the one used in automatic cars.

But potential buyers who marvel at the bike's many personalized variations will find that they will have to shell out twice more than the price of China-made motorcycles, which have already flooded the domestic market. The Mio's introductory price is P64,000.

Optimism

Fararons, however, said Norkis Yamaha is optimistic that the Mio will make its mark in Dumaguete, which motorcycle manufacturers regard as No. 1 in solo use motorcycle sales.

"There is a 15-20 percent growth potential for motorcycle demand in Dumaguete each year," Fararons said, as he revealed that the local Land Transportation Office registers at least 350 brand-new motorcycles every month.

"The number could go up to as high as 450 units a month after a good crop harvest or during the first semester of each school year, as dealers target the student population aged 15-17," he said.

Fararons attributed the high sales of motorcycles in Dumaguete to the nearness of destinations and a supportive local government unit, which provides for specific parking areas for motorcycles.

The Philippines sells about 300,000 motorcycles each year, which is still low compared to neighboring countries Vietnam (750,000) and Thailand (1 million).

Makeover magic!

By Vanessa Arellano Doctor

The Philippine School of Interior Design and 2bU! held a contest last month for readers who wanted to get their personal spaces jazzed up for free.

Nearly a hundred applications flooded our inbox, everyone pleading for an overhaul. Three winners were eventually named: Papuz Apolinario, Eric Anacay and Jun Ongteco.

Here, we present how three bands of creative PSID students transformed the bedrooms of the lucky three from drab to total fab.

With help from intrepid PSID students, three lucky chaps got their wish to have their personal space overhauled for free

Clutter queen

"My room's a total mess," 22-year-old Papuz Apolinario warned beforehand. "It used to be my parents' room, so some of their old stuff are still here and I never really got the time to arrange everything. Plus, some of my friends also stash their things here, so the room just got tinier and tinier, as the knickknacks began to pile up and add to my belongings."

The team assigned to wrestle with her space—Leanne Lee, Eunice Ong and David Yu—were also in their early 20's. If they were shocked at the disarray, they barely showed it.

Papuz is a basketball fanatic, which explains why there were about three clocks on the walls with the sport's logo all over and why there were more than a dozen posters of anything basketball-related plastered on every available space. Hey, the girl adores the game!

Group leader Lea Lee summed up the challenge. "There was a lot of clutter and the paint on the walls were starting to peel off. The colors were also a bit mismatched. Before the makeover, the room looked more like a work area than a bedroom. A lot of stuff definitely had to go."

After nearly a week of paint jobs, rearrangements and junk evictions, the room looked totally new—wider and more inviting! The walls have been painted cooler shades of blue and green, and some of the previously unnoticed spaces are now accessible storage areas. Bravo!

Single couple

When Jun and Ima Ongreco married and decided to turn Jun's room into something fit for a family, they thought of transforming his bachelor's space into something more zen-like.

A couple of paint jobs were expected to create that cool, serene ambience, but the growing pile of knickknacks at odd sections of the room eventually defeated the goal of simplicity.

When baby Raphue came, the extra furniture started to add to the already cluttered space. The crib added to the multiplying boxes of shoes, books and toys, which had turned themselves into little hills of junk.

PSID students Joby Belmonte, Marie Chung-Imperial, Alan Pascua and Janet Dyquiarco-Torio clearly had a lot of work in their hands.

"The room had the workings of a bachelor's pad made odd-looking by a number of kids' stuff. So the group did away with the posters on the walls which screamed 'the bachelor days' and rearranged the furniture to create more space to move," team leader and PSID student council president Joby Belmonte explained.

Raphue was eventually transferred to his own nursery, so the group was given more floor space to work with.

A few days after, Jun and Ima's room had been magically converted from a cramped family area into a master suite that could give hotel decorators a run for their money!

Notes with wit and heart

THEIRS stood out from hundreds of e-mails.

Papuz Apolinario listed reasons why her room deserved a makeover:

"Disorganized. That would be the best word to describe it. Every time I try to fix it, the difference I make is always barely noticeable.

"Stuffed. It is—literally! Half of the things in my room are probably junk, like the very old computer or purchases that I don't even remember making. Even the bed hardly has space for me to sleep on.

"Jurassic. When it comes to style—especially the walls. This is probably because I live in my grandparents' house.

"Challenging. Giving my room a makeover will require really creative minds to completely give it a new look. I have always wanted to have a thematic room but have never seen it happen.

"Luck. I'm trying mine... Just like what was mentioned in the ad, fairy godmothers, make my wish come true!"

We liked the wit, the photos were challenging and so Papuz's fairy godparents heeded her call.

Eric Anacay summoned his creative powers and made a very entertaining Powerpoint presentation that grabbed us and refused to let go.

Ruchie Otengco wrote to us, asking us to give his brother and sister-in-law a hand in making more space for their growing family.

"I'd like to surprise my brother and his family through this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to have their room undergo a rebirth. Now that there have been new additional family members in the house, his room is starting to get filled up by all kinds of things. When we first moved in, we had comics, toys and CDs. Now we have his wife's stuff, shoes, magazines and of course, the baby stuff."

"The design challenge would be for the room to have space for mobility and to have some storage or shelving system for the stuff. I want to make sure that the room is functional, the TV, and a small niche for the PC so they can do officework while looking after the baby."

Thank you! Please do send us more e-mails, we need your suggestions and ideas. We will be happy to help you design your dream living space.

Happy bachelor

PHOTOGRAPH BY

BECAUSE computer programmer Eric Anacay really lives in Laguna, it was no surprise to Lenny Ang, Chico Cristobal, Mel Cardino and Jenneth Sy to find his weekday studio unit practically empty, save for a small refrigerator, a mattress and a coffee table.

Since the unit was only about 20 sq.m, it was important that Eric's bed could be tucked away easily should he have guests around. The group decided to get rid of Eric's air mattress, which took up a lot of space, and replaced it with a sofa bed.

The original murky green wall color had to go in favor of softer hues of blue and green, to give the room a more relaxing ambience. And because Eric's unit was practically a bachelor's pad, the room needed to have four things: a sleeping area, a dining table, a small kitchen and a place to entertain friends.

The first thing one would notice upon entering the place was the kitchen. To remedy this, the team moved Eric's bulky closet nearer the kitchen sink to block off its view from the main hallway. The sofa bed was placed against the wall near the door, to give it more space when opened.

And to complement the rest of the area, several accessories such as candles, throw pillows, vases and an area rug were added, giving the room a homey, cozy atmosphere.

TWO 2bU1 readers last week went home with an armload of goodies after Citibank Clear Visa Mini awarded them P5,000 each to have a shopping spree at the Edsa Shangri-La Mall.

Twenty-three-year-old Cedric Ira Aquino and 26-year-old Chi Aran, assisted by top models and product endorsers Corey Wills and Raya Mananquil, experienced the purchasing power held by the Citibank Clear Visa Mini as they raided Adidas, Carbon, Kickers, Planet Reebok, Time Depot, Blue Kitchen, Bayo and Replay—just to name a few.

Chi and Cedric were chosen from a number of "Why I Want A Fashion Makeover" e-mail entries received from Nov. 10-24. The shopping spree kicked off with a hearty lunch at Café Provencal, followed by the trips to the stores. Raya and Corey helped the winners pick out new outfits for casual and party wear, all of which were paid through Raya's Clear

Time to give

THEY come in leather, metal, plastic, and rubber. Present-day watches do more than just tell time, they have become these high-tech mini gadgets and fashion accessories that say—wrist power!

Power brands such as Nike, Diesel, Kenneth Cole, Lacoste, Fossil, and DKNY have ventured into this trend by designing stylish timepieces for sports, casual and formal wear that fit their brand image.

Under the sportswear giant Nike, intricate features for workout and athletic training were incorporated in designs under the Monitoring, Inara, and Oregon lines. Presto and D-Line are simpler, but retain lines and colors that are hip to wear than your usual sports watch.

Fashion icons Diesel, DKNY, Lacoste, and Fossil watches make use of leather, metal and rubber, and sometimes mix two materials for more unconventional and unique shapes. A wide range of style is available that would suit most tastes and personalities. Their analog timepieces feature distinctive face designs while digital watches are marked with innovative displays showing the time and date.

Kenneth Cole and Reaction lines are both classic and inventive. Using a mix of metal, textile and leather, it achieves designs that would satisfy the conservative to the adventurous watch wearer.

All watch brands are available at L Time Studio, a store with a unique concept in watch retail. It evolves with the present consumer mindset of lifestyle shopping, with emphasis on fashion, sports and technology-centered timepieces.

L Time Studio branches are located in Shangri-La Plaza, SM Megamall, Robinsons Galleria, Alabang Town Center, Festival Mall, SM Pampanga, SM Bicutan, SM Baguio, SM Department Store in Makati, and the newest addition at the Power Plant mall in Rockwell, Makati. The company is also set to open three more stores at the Robinsons Mall in Pioneer, Market Market, Fort Bonifacio Global City, and Limketkar Mall in the province of Cagayan de Oro.

The Need to Exceed and Succeed

Every parent nurtures high hopes and big dreams for their children right from the time they are born. Moms and Dads want them to be and do and have the best. They want their children to excel in everything and exceed all expectations, even in height. Parents are proud when their teenagers grow taller than they. An above-average height is often regarded as a tribute to the parents' excellent care, providing their kids with the right diet and the right multivitamins. Some even perceive height to be a factor that can contribute to the eventual success of their sons and daughters in their jobs and careers. They may be right!

Research links height to career success

Researchers have indicated that there is a definite advantage to being tall, particularly for teenagers. In the study conducted by three highly respected American economists ("The Effect of Adolescent Experience on Labor Market Outcomes: The Case of Height" by Nicola Persico and Andrew Postlewaite of the University of Pennsylvania and Dan Silverman of the University of Michigan), it was "found that being tall confers an earnings advantage in the workplace." It showed that no individual's height affects his or her ability to rise easily up the corporate ladder within an organization. They uncovered evidence to bolster their theory that high school teenagers who are of above-average height develop greater self-esteem and readily take on leadership roles. Feeling looked up to, literally and figuratively, these tall teenagers would very likely carry this self-confidence into their adult years when they pursue their careers.

Make the most of the puberty years

The study affirms the importance of making the most of a child's puberty years. Puberty is a critical stage marked by rapid growth spurts and physical changes. The puberty years—which usually begins at 10 or 11 years old for girls and 12 or 13 years old for boys up to the age of 22 generally for both—see a dramatic increase in the amount of calories and nutrients needed, as well as remarkable growth spurts in height.

Realizing this, Tynar Drug House, one of the country's first all-Filipino pharmaceutical companies, was the first to develop in 1998 a food supplement with multivitamins, especially for teenagers: Cherifer PGM, with Chloroella Growth Factor or CGF. Through the years, Cherifer has become a well-recognized brand in the country. In fact, Cherifer Syrup with Biotin and CGF for toddlers and young kids is widely prescribed by pediatricians and family doctors. Its well-balanced formula provides proper nutritional support for active growing children, strengthens the immunity system, and helps promote weight and height gain. As kids reach their adolescence, though, their nutritional requirements change. To meet these requirements, Tynar developed Cherifer PGM. "PGM" stands for Pubertal Growth Maximizer.

By its very name, Cherifer PGM helps ensure that these kids not only get the full share of their nutrient requirements during their growth spurt years, but also helps enhance and even maximize their height potential because it contains Chloroella Growth Factor (CGF). Cherifer PGM utilizes only high-grade, concentrated Chloroella Growth Factor. This extraordinary ingredient has a remarkable ability to stimulate tissue growth and promote height increase, according to a child's genetic potential, without causing unnecessary weight gain or adverse side effects.

With an adequately proper diet and Cherifer PGM, teenagers can fulfill the need to exceed their average height expectations and have greater confidence to succeed in whatever they want to do.

DO YOU MEASURE UP?

Who wants to be average when you can be taller?

Yes, taller! With Cherifer PGM®, you can reach your full height potential!

Cherifer PGM is the multivitamin formulated specially for those of you between 10 to 22 years old! It provides the right amounts of vitamins and minerals to meet your RDA (Required Daily Allowance). What's more, it contains Chloroella Growth Factor (CGF) — a concentrated natural protein that enables you to reach your maximum height potential. It's no wonder doctors recommend Cherifer PGM as the multivitamin for growing teenagers like you.

Want to measure up to your potential? With the proper diet and Cherifer PGM everyday, you can be all and as tall as you can be! Because height matters!

Consult your family doctor and ask him about Cherifer PGM.

Chocolate for everyone

We originally planned to give out three treatments. But since you clamored for it, 50 lucky 2bU! readers will be enjoying several hours of pampering

By Pam Pastor

A few months ago, we came out with a story on Pinnacle HealthPointe Spa's Chocolate Lovers Body Scrub treatment. Then we asked you to tell us why you deserve that treatment.

For days, messages poured in from different people. We were overwhelmed.

You gave us all kinds of reasons—new jobs, a successful thesis defense, birthdays, the unfulfilled dream to go to a spa, stress, the intense need for a break.

Some people wrote to us, asking that we give the prize not to them but their loved ones. There was a girl whose best friend needed cheering up because she just broke up with her boyfriend, another whose best friend needed pampering because she just got married, and countless kids who wanted to win the spa treatment for their parents.

We received letters from students, call center agents, young moms, bankers, lawyers, even a soldier. A cat even wrote to us for her master.

One brilliant reader said, "Who knows, maybe you can give all of us treatments."

And we thought, why not?

If Oprah can afford to give over two hundred cars, surely we can afford to give fifty spa treatments, right?

It is Christmas, after all.

With the help of our wonderful friends from Pinnacle HealthPointe and Inquirer's Marketing Department, we made this dream come true.

Low-maintenance is cool

PEOPLE who know me well say I am, in many ways, like a guy. I can participate in a heated hirit fest without surrendering in tears, dissect and analyze basketball games with technical precision, go on an MTV Jackass marathon without flinching, devour truckloads of rice kargador-style, and get ready for any occasion in 15 minutes flat—including a shower.

Unlike some girls (and perhaps the metrosexual population), I WILL NOT get out of bed two hours before I step out the door to accommodate an extra 15 minutes putting on eyeliner or waiting for my moisturizer to penetrate my epidermis.

I don't want to lose face when I stand in front of God at the Pearly Gates while He recaps my entire existence and reveals that I spent more time exfoliating than doing worthwhile activities on Earth.

I am almost embarrassed to admit this, but I am very, very low-maintenance. Embarrassed, because I know that the term inevitably conjures up images of a bedraggled head of hair and an overgrowth of bigote.

But I beg to differ. Low-maintenance is more than an adjective

It helps to know the techniques and have the best products to do every beauty task effectively—that is, in a snap to describe my lifestyle or a euphemism for being unforgivably lazy. Low-maintenance has become a talent, a skill, a manifestation of being effectively kikay (see my first-ever column dated Sept. 11, 2002 for an in-depth discussion of this concept).

It helps, of course, to know the techniques and have the best products to do every beauty task effectively—that is, in a snap! And this, ladies (and metrosexual gentlemen), is what I can help you with. Your low-maintenance lifestyle starts now.

Simple skincare

For the past month or so, I've been sinning against my skin. Due to an extreme urge to permanently Velcro myself to my bed the moment I set foot in my room, I've downgraded my skincare from luxury prods to drugstore mainstays.

Even more disturbing is my

cutting down my CTM (that's cleanse-tone-moisturize for you) routine to a tamad CM. I was almost expecting blemishes the size of Russia to attack my skin, but I was sidetracked by people saying that my skin looked so healthy!

It could only mean one of two things: It's World Politeness Month or my pared-down regimen actually works. I Googled the former and confirmed there was no such thing, so I'm pretty sure I just picked the right stuff for my face.

For low-maintenance loot, use a mild cleanser that takes away all dirt and grime without depleting your skin's natural moisture, which acts as a built-in defense system. Lay off the chemicals for a while and allow your skin to rebalance itself, as in most cases, altering your skin's "personality" is the culprit behind skin problems.

How do you know you're using a winner? Well, if it doesn't make your face dry and tight. I swear by Dove Facial Foam. I'd willingly do one of those "Whaaaat?" testimonials for a lifetime supply of the product.

I followed the same principle for my moisturizer. Basic is still better. In the morning, I'd put on a moisturizer/sunscreen/makeup base. D'orel UV Perfect Tinted Moisturizer is my current fave. Before I conk out at night, I make sure I put on Celestique Moisturizing Gel for amazingly silky skin without the oil slick when I wake up in the morning.

Minute makeup

Another reason my skin has been behaving extraordinarily well is the amount of makeup I use on a daily basis, which is pretty much next to nothing.

Since my moisturizer also takes care of evening out my skin, all I really have to do is add a hint of color to my Casper complexion with liquid lip and cheek tint, mop off the stain on my lips with clear balm, curl my lashes, and I'm done for the day! I finally know how it feels to have a fresh face.

I never thought the day would come, but I used the last drop of my Mistine Lip and Cheek Tint a couple of weeks ago and haven't replenished my supply.

I've been using Philosophy the Supernatural in the meantime, and I love how it immediately cools my skin and wakes me up especially on mornings when I'm as up-and-about as a turtle with a sprained ankle.

My lip care of choice is Badger Unscented Healing Balm because it's, well, unscented (strong scents give me vertigo, especially if I can smell it from literally right under my nose). And since I think curled lashes instantly lift any face up, I've renewed my pact with Shu Uemura Eyelash Curler (care of Shu's brand manager Tina Tinto, who took me out of my misery when I lost my favorite kikay kit), 'til-death-or-kikay kit thief-do-us-part.

Super-fast shower

I shower systematically. It's almost like I have a built-in program that tells me what to do as soon as I step into the bathroom. To save time (and water!), I shampoo first, then put on conditioner.

While waiting for the good stuff to do its magic on my hair, I brush my teeth. Then I rinse, put my hair up in a crab clip (it's in its looong Marina stage right now), and use a foaming shower scrub to clean and exfoliate. How's that for efficiency?

One thing I learned is to "rotate" shampoos and conditioners to prevent build-up that can dull my strands. While I use pretty much any kind of shampoo, I am very particular about conditioners because my hair needs extra care now that I'm getting a kick out of feeling my hair touch my waist.

I like Pantene Total Care Conditioner because it doesn't weigh my hair down, smells great, and is a breeze to rinse off.

I like feeling smooth and silky all over, but I hate having to use a scrub and a body wash, especially on days when I want to own every minute. These days, I kill two birds with one stone with Freeman Shower Scrub. Just use it with a loofah and feel like you just came from the spa.

Finishing touches

Once I'm fresh and clean, I give my skin an extra boost with a light moisturizer (I'm not a lotion person) like Nivea Light Moisturizing Spray. It's the handiest "lotion" around because of its spray bottle. Look, Ma, no spills!

And because I abhor having to blow-dry my hair, I have a little trick that keeps even my extra-long mane manageable. After I towel-dry, I comb through my damp locks with a wide-toothed comb, then apply a peso-sized (use a smaller amount for shorter hair) dollop of Citre Shine Anti-Frizz Serum through my locks. I comb again, then divide my hair into two sections down the front of my shoulders (pretend you're a mermaid whose only option for underwear is her hair).

Don't tuck your hair in your ears until dry, and you'll have hair that will cooperate with you through the day.

A date with Joshua Payne

Get to know the man behind the hottest baritone voice to hit Manila

By Angela V. Ignacio
26U Correspondent

HIS face screams poster-boy material. His broad shoulders and tall, muscular frame make you think of a typical football player. But when he sings, you can't help but be blown away.

Such was the effect hot new singer/songwriter Joshua Payne had on local audiences during his recent visit to Manila. Armed with a deliciously cool baritone voice and chiseled good looks, he's got enough artillery to make hopeless romantics fall in love with him despite the raging weather. He gave Filipinos a taste of his heartrending music, with the MTV AIDS Summit and a show at the Podium among the venues.

26U! was fortunate enough to catch the crooner twice, first during his press-con at Hard Rock Café, and the second in a follow-up interview.

Rarely does one encounter such a humble, down-to-earth guy. When teased about his landing a spot in People Magazine's Sexiest Men of 2004, he actually blushed. Now that's something we don't see everyday!

Universal message

Over lunch, Joshua animatedly talked about his music and his life. His debut album, "Your Love, My Home," is replete with poignant originals as well as remakes of musky classics, like Bread's "If" and Chicago's "If You Leave Me Now."

It marks Joshua's first collaboration with Grammy-award winning producer-songwriter Michael Omartian, who's the mastermind behind the hit songs of legendary balladeers Christopher Cross, Peter Dinklage, Amy Grant, Donna Summer and Rod Stewart.

Today's generation might be too young to appreciate this kind of sentimentality, but the message that his music contains is something everyone can relate to. This is evident in the title track's lyrics.

"There's a cry in my insides for what's eternal. If somebody hears, I will never let you go, you will never know a night alone, I will make your love my home," that's from here to eternity," explained Joshua. "It will ring true for a 17-year-old kid, and it will ring true for an 85-year-old man who's never known love any day of his life. It will ring true forever. So if I can make lasting events happen on paper, and let those translate to people in the form of music, then that's what I'm going to do."

This is also why he isn't too worried about venturing into the young, fickle world of pop. "If the music lands in the right place, hits a kid right between the eyes and he says, 'Oh man, I want that,' then I'm glad. I just write what's on the inside, and if that transcends generations, then good."

It's in the genes

It isn't hard to see where he got his incredible talent from, because it clearly runs in the family. His father, a church musician, and his mother, an opera singer, were key figures in shaping his musical talents, and he grew up listening to every kind of music.

What made his case a special one, however, was the fact that he was born almost completely deaf. But as a toddler, he had an operation that restored most of his hearing, and his parents played James Taylor and opera music to help the healing process along.

"I remember coming home and being able to hear music... [it's] an incredible feeling to wake up and be able to hear it. It certainly makes me appreciate music more than I would have," he said.

Playing sports also became a passion for him, such that music was relegated to the back burner for a while. He had a promising career in football, but a serious knee injury at 19 literally changed his life.

"I had another injury almost immediately, so it was like somebody was telling me something. So I said, okay, I'm listening," he said, chuckling a little. "I didn't give it up very graciously, but in those times, you go through the proverbial school of hard knocks, and you learn the things that make you a man—things that make life real and important, the values that football never gave me."

"Looking back, I think my parents did the best they could. They were great at raising me, and they were supportive of whatever I chose. I think now they know (or they knew all along) that I would eventually choose music, or it would choose me," he added.

But in spite of everything that has happened, Joshua is happy with the way his life has turned out.

"I think my path is kinda like that," he said, making a winding motion with his hands. "Music wasn't a thing that I'd really thought was anything other than what it was for my family; I didn't know that you could actually make a living out of it. And now it's the chosen path, and I'm grateful to have it."

On love and football

There's a certain earnestness and honesty in his music that's pretty hard to come by these days, and one can also see it in the way he talks about things he's passionate about. Take football, for instance.

"I wanted to play football really bad. It was something I gave my heart, mind and soul to," Joshua shared. "I was fast, I was strong, and I had incredible opportunities to play. But all the elements were against me."

It was painful for him to accept it at first, but soon enough, he realized that his true calling lay somewhere else.

"Football is, in my opinion, the most selfish sport on the face of the planet, because it's all about me... and I'm not called to be all about me. So by getting to go down that road and learn from mistakes, I got to a place where I was receptive to hearing what was in my soul, and now it's music," he said. "It was always there... it's this undeniable thing that sort of jelled with my love experience, and that's what I'm going to express. That's where I live."

Hearing him talk about love, meanwhile, was a different thing altogether. His poet's soul would reveal itself, and the ladies couldn't help but swoon.

"Love isn't a sensibility, like some people think. It's a force, it's life, it's what holds nature together, it's this typhoon that happened and couldn't have been very devastating and we all tremble in its wake. But at the same time, it holds everything together," he said earnestly while eyeing the cheesecake platter set before him (he loves cheesecake, by the way).

"Love is so powerful, it's way more powerful than the earth. You can't look at love and stamp it as a tried sensibility; it doesn't work that way. You learn about love through what you've been through, and that's what I write about."

He couldn't have put it in a better way.

Manila welcomes The Barbs!

2bU! caught up with the hot British band while they were waiting to play their second gig at the MYXMO street party in Morayta

By Diego Rosano R. Mapa
2bU! Contributor

THE BARBS were in town recently straight from London, and they were suddenly Manila's newest sensation. Their refreshing hard pop-punk sound rocked the fans and earned them massive new ones in their first Asian appearance at the Greenbelt Expo Exchange.

The gang planned in to play a series of shows with the help of Pony footwear. This educational treat also wouldn't have been possible without the hard work of a simple rock fan named Edgar "Par" Sallan (gig promoter and main connection of the band).

Talk to Par about music, and you'd find yourself taking down notes on rock history from the Beatles, Stones, The Clash, to bands you've never heard of and new music you'd want to get into immediately.

"In the history of punk and rock and roll," he said, "The Barbs has been the only great Brit band ever to play Manila since Eric Clapton, Depeche Mode and The Beatles."

The band released its debut album, "Lupine Peroxide," under Mother Tongue Records last September 2004. The album is an evil fast car with your girlfriend hitting the breeze. It is a mix of surf, rockabilly, spaceships and the B52s gone mad. Besides the carrier single, "Massive Crush," which already topped the charts, the 15-track CD has other smashing cuts such as "The Importance of Being Evil," "Nowaitaminit," "Dangerman" and the blow horn-driven "Bury You."

The band is made up of Tim Box (lead guitar and vocals), Amy Casey (rhythm guitars and vocals), Jim Tucker (bass) and Simon Hartop (drums).

The quartet was simply ecstatic about the warm response of Manila to their music.

"I was very impressed because we were told that the Filipino crowd might be reserved and not go bonkers. But I thought the show was great because there were people going up the stage and doing a good amount of movement. Considering that two or three weeks ago we were unknown and nobody really knew the album, I was really surprised how the crowd got into it. It was as good as a home crowd!" said Tim.

I caught up with the Brits while they were waiting to play their second gig before a broader audience composed of thousands at the MYXMO street party in Morayta.

What's the story behind how you got to play here in the Philippines?

Tim (T): Edgar Sallan got in touch with us nearly a year ago and was talking about getting us over here. He really worked hard. He got Pony involved to help us get out, and we were more than happy to come over. It's just has been a great experience.

How long have you been together?

T: Two years now. Mid-2002, Amy joined us on Halloween night.

So it was just the three of you at first?

T: That's right, we were in a band previously and split up. We decided to work together again but we needed a new vocalist. We advertised and Amy just came from Australia to look for a band.

Have you been in other bands?

T: We've been in lots of bands since we were little.

Amy (A): This is my first band!

JIM Tucker (bass), Simon Hartop (drums), Amy Casey (rhythm guitars and vocals) and Tim Box (lead guitar and vocals)

SIMON sneers at the cam.

AMY and Tim get close to their Pinoy fans.

What kind of band were you thinking before you formed The Barbs?

T: It would have to be the Pixies ready, but it has become something so different from now. Amy came in and added something to it that we never thought we could have. And now it's just gotten somewhere. Well, for us it's just The Barbs. That's it, that's us.

What other band names did you come up with before The Barbs?

Simon (S): Actually, the band name came before the band.

T: A long time ago, we were in a band called The Barbs. We were very young and the band didn't work out. So when we decided to do this band, we thought we'd keep the name.

So is 'The Barbs' short for "the barbiturates?" (Laughter)

S: Customs in Hong Kong said that!

Jim (J): I think we might change all our names to Barbara!

S: Actually, it came from a Pixies song "Hangwire." Listen to the lyrics and you'll know.

How many countries have you been to?

T: Three now—UK, Holland and here.

A: And Australia!

What's your lifestyle back home?

T: It's very affluent. (Laughter)

Any day jobs?

T: We scrape by.

As full-time musicians?

T: Full-time losers, yeah (laughs). No, we just work on our music really hard.

Who triggers the samples when you play live?

J: I do, my left foot.

It's amazing how you stick with the timing. How do you do that?

J: It was really hard in the beginning. We would just bash on our guitars then, but we wanted to put in some sound effects. We ended up messing up with the sampler and it was getting harder and harder. Then, it was, "Okay, let's have some funny noises at the same time." It took a lot of practice for it to work.

T: Simon has very good timing as well.

What were your expectations before playing here?

A: We didn't know that the music scene was so massive over here. So when you're not thinking about and you're exposed to it for the first time, it's a little overwhelming, man!

T: We never knew how big Manila was, the place, and how huge and intense the culture was and everything. It's a complete eye opener for us, and at the same time, a brilliant experience. Everyday seems to get better and better!

What are your plans when you get back?

A: I'm gonna open my presents.

T: Yeah, and I think this New Year, we will be recording tracks for our second album, then play some shows. And we are gonna tell all the bands that we know in England how good it is out here.

SPYDA shows the crowd how to do an alley oop.

The AND 1 Mix Tape Tour

Team makes a crowd-pleasing visit to Manila

Ball-smart team for a basketball-crazy nation

Text and photos by Dexter R. Matilla
26U Correspondent

AND 1 is streetball.

And the AND 1 Mix Tape Tour Team is the best group of street ballers alive.

Got your attention?

Good. Because if you were at the Araneta Coliseum when Dennis "Spyda" Chism captured a crazy alley oop from halfcourt, or when Aaron "AO" Owens broke his defenders' ankles with his mean dribbling prowess, or when John "Helicopter" Humphrey did a 'between-the-legs' tomahawk slam off the fastbreak, then you'd know it's the truth.

Brandishing the basketball flair that made them famous worldwide, the AND 1 Mix Tape Team cruised to an easy 85-64 victory over the Crewsaders, composed of players from the Philippine Basketball League and several hand-picked ones from the open run held outside the arena prior to the game.

The Crewsaders, however, had their share of the spotlight as young Pinoy basketball wiz Nino Ventura held his own against his heroes AO and Jamar "Pharmacist" Davis, earning him the moniker "little wizard" from AND 1's play-by-play annee, Set Free.

Spreading the word

The day before the game, Relzbach Ventures, the local distributor of AND 1 products in the country, held a press conference at the Discovery Suites in Ortigas where the players were billeted.

The other players who came for the tour were Tony "Go Get It" Jones, Robert "50" Martin, Lonnie "Prime Objective" Harrell, Wakky "Main Event" Dixon, John "High Octane" Harvey and Tyron "Almo" Evans.

AND 1 public relations director Mandy Murphy said they were surprised with the immense popularity of basketball in the Philippines. Likewise, they were even more surprised to see that the mix-tape style of play is growing here.

After the press conference, the AND 1 delegation made a trip to SM North Edsa to visit one of the AND 1 stores and sports shop Toby's for autograph signing and photo opportunities.

FANS line up for the AND 1 signing at Toby's.

On the bus back to the hotel, the players were like a bunch of happy campers. Pharmacist, Spyda, and 50 took turns talking trash to each other.

Memorable quips that stuck to my mind include those from 50, who at first, was trying to doze off. He told Pharmacist, who had been laughing non-stop: "You're laughin' 24 hours, man. All you do is laugh—at the airport, at the hotel. Give it a rest."

Spyda, who was seated at the back and is the newest member, likewise got a beating from 50. After seeing a huge billboard of AND 1 Mix Tape, 50 told him, "You'll never get that poster shot, man."

AO tried to acquaint himself with the locals by opening his window and asked motorists to watch the game the next day. I then told AO to say "Kumusta" to the people and if they asked him back, his reply would be "Mabuti." It came out something like "ma-bao-ty."

Leaving a mark

Just like its National Basketball Association counterparts, the AND 1 Mix Tape Tour Team has a worldwide following that cannot be denied.

"Nowadays, if you would ask basketball-playing kids what they want to be when they grow up, they would no longer just answer 'Be in the NBA,' Murphy said.

"Now, they would tell you that they want to be a member of the AND 1 Mix Tape Team."

In a basketball-crazy nation where unknowns make do with makeshift basketball courts on the streets, the AND 1 Mix Tape Tour visit definitely opened up doors for the talented to be recognized.

Murphy believes that organizing the tour not only meant introducing AND 1 products as made for streetballers, but also giving exposure to players who deserve it.

"They will definitely be back next year," Relzbach Ventures president Bob Bachmann said.

Some have branded the AND 1 Mix Tape Team as modern-day Harlem Globetrotters with style. But A1 members beg to differ.

So keep it in mind. They ain't hip-hop globetrottin' harlems. Call them that, and you'd better be ready to look silly, end up with a ball thump on your head and get dashed.

Food binge times five

By Cheryl Tiu
2bU! Correspondent

"THERE'S an event at the Fort tonight. You'll be taking your first course in one restaurant, then your second course in another, and so on," 2bU!'s chief told me by cell phone. "Do you want to do it?"

Do I want to do it? The idea of restaurant-hopping at the Fort dangled before my eyes like a pendulum trying to hypnotize me. No way was I going to pass up the opportunity.

I walked into Good Earth, the first designated restaurant, at around 8 p.m.—a bit late, having come from another event. My companions for the food binge told me they had already started on their first dish of Tunaquitos but I could still catch up.

Good Earth's Precy Florentino sat with us and explained the dishes we were to try.

The starters: Duckquitos—duck morsels and greens stuffed into wonton shells and drizzled with a fruit-and-hoisin based sauce, Shrimp with Walnuts, Chicken Pao and my personal favorite, Lily on the Pond—minced shrimp and water chestnut sandwiched between rounds of eggplant and laced with coconut-and-curry sauce.

As much as I enjoyed the aristocratic twist Good Earth has superbly infused into traditional Chinese dishes, we had to conserve our appetites as this was only our first of five restaurants.

Ornate interiors

Our second stop was Prince of Jaipur. I've been here a few times with my friends and every time, I never fail to be mesmerized by its ornate interiors and hand-painted tapestries strewn artistically all over the place. I adored Indian food so I was pretty excited for our meal.

We were served Sikkim Red Wine to complement our kebabs, with wine glasses that were extremely large, almost like mini-fishbowls. The waiter told us they were wine glasses for Indian princes and princesses. Wow, they really do make you feel like royalty in Jaipur!

The meal started off with fried

It was a night of gluttony as we tried out five choice restaurants in the Fort papadam, a crispy appetizer akin to paper-thin chicharon which we mixed with Jaipur's assorted raita dips. Then came various platters of Samosas, Tandoori Roti and the house specialty, Assorted Kebabs of lamb, fish, chicken, prawns and cottage cheese, served suspended on metal skewers. Owner Mr. T. Max told us that their tandoori oven was made out of clay, thus everything was thoroughly cooked inside as well as outside.

We also had brown rice on the side—probably the most flavorful I have ever tried. The kebabs were addicting, and I kept accepting everything being served until I realized that within a span of 10 minutes, my stomach had noticeably expanded.

Next, we were off to Le Soufflé. Since I was fascinated by everything French—I took French as my foreign language two years ago, attended a French business school in Hungary for a semester and completely fell in love with Paris—I was looking forward to rekindling my taste for French Mediterranean cuisine.

We were in for a treat. A Castillo de Molina Cabernet Sauvignon 2002 from Chile was on hand to accompany our main course of Grilled Lamb Tenderloin in Rosemary and Garlic Sauce, with assorted greens in creamy French Dressing and Potato au Gratin on the side. We commended chef Patron Andreas Katzer for his masterpiece that rang of the restaurant's five-star caliber.

Milder fare

At Palm Beach Singapore, we were joined by managing director Vincent Cheng. We were told that while Singaporeans like spicy

Fat-Loss Questions?

For Effective Fat Removal, Ask Our Marie France Doctor.

Find out what you need to know about fat loss with the help of our Marie France physician Dr. Ariel Torres.

Q. How can I enjoy the delicious dishes during the Christmas season and still stay in shape?

A. Take note of these simple nutrition and consumption facts. First, eat fiber together with any meal or snack. It helps to dilute the food that you take in so you only absorb half or even less of it. Fruits and vegetables are very good sources of fiber. Second, savor the food by eating slowly. Not the actual chewing but rather take your time when eating. This avoids the sugar surge and the eventual sugar drop when insulin is suddenly released that will make you crave for more food. Third, avoid binge eating to compensate for long lapses between meals. Don't eat everything all at once but rather eat a few of each dish at a time. And lastly, try to avoid energy food with sugar or carbohydrates during the latter part of the day if you don't have any strenuous activity left to do. That's how we do it at Marie France. Our proficient medical doctors and consultants recommend the appropriate fat-loss treatments and give nutritional advice that would suit the client's needs. With Marie France's help, you can stay fit, healthy and slim, even during the holidays.

What women say about Marie France:

"At Marie France, I learned the right way of eating moderately. Their relaxing and effective treatments helped me to lose weight effortlessly. Now, I look physically fit and my health is in excellent condition, thanks to Marie France."

Karen Sanchez and chef Chris Bautista joined us for our final meal for the night.
Gourdo's Crème Brûlée was amazing—an impeccable concoction of sweetness that bordered crisp on top. The Tiramisu, meanwhile, was a creamy, mild blend of coffee flavors. Upon ordering my Gelato Affogato, I drowned it in Crème de Cassis (though the resto also offers espresso and Bailey's). I loved how the fruity black currant taste nourished the Italian ice cream.
There was one more surprise. Gourdo's also raffled off some items from their retail store. I won a basket of coffee mugs, oil and vinegar bottles, cookie jars, etc.
I did not eat anything the next day and I didn't really care. After having stuffed myself with some of the best restaurants at The Fort, everything else paled in comparison. The glut-ton in me had been satisfied and days after, it was still basking in the savory aftermath.

WHAT IS MESOTHERAPY?

MesoTherapy is an esthetic medical procedure that melts fats away, targeting cellulite reduction, body contouring and weight loss, among others. The procedure involves injecting microscopic quantities of natural plant extracts, pharmaceutical medications and vitamins into the mesoderm (layer of adipose fat cells and connective tissue under the skin).

MesoTherapy treats fat deposits and the result is a smoother skin surface. MesoTherapy spot reduces fat in specific areas, like "love handles". The fat deposits are flushed out and the body does not gain the weight back in other areas, which often happens after liposuction. MesoTherapy is a non-surgical procedure that does not require hospital admittance, general anesthesia, or downtime. The ideal candidate is a person that is of good health, exercises regularly, is within 25 pounds of their ideal body weight, and has fat deposits that have not responded to exercise. Patients should also be more than 18 years old.

Treatment areas will be free of unwanted fat as the patient maintains a healthy diet and cellulite treatments may maintain on a six-month to one-year basis.

Bananacles

Even hodge-podge Christmas feasting doesn't end until dessert is served. Since everybody is bound to be sick of the perennial fruitcake, offer to bring something different, like Bananacles. By coating the bananas in green, red and yellow-colored chocolate, this school canteen favorite of old is given a yuletide twist. Best of all, it's a no-fuss treat you can whip up in a mere 30 minutes!

6 large bananas
Popsicle or lollipop sticks
1/2 c each colored chocolate (chocolate coating available in various colors in specialty shops. Choose red, green and yellow)

Canola oil
1/2 c each chocolate coating (dark or white)

Roasted nuts
Cut bananas in half crosswise. Pierce one side with popsicle or lollipop sticks.

Melt the colored chocolate in individual bowls in the microwave. Heat in a microwave oven on medium heat.

Stir the chocolate at 15 second intervals (be careful, colored chocolate burns easily). You can drop a little canola oil to loosen the melted chocolate coating.

Put the chopped nuts on a tray. Dip the bananas into desired color and roll them on chopped nuts.

Transfer to a tray and freeze. When hard, wrap in plastic and store in a covered container in the freezer.

(Recipe from "Recipes For Easy Entertaining Cookbook" from ABS-CBN Publishing)

Sassy Sangria

Beer may be a staple for weekend parties but the holiday season calls for something more festive and sophisticated.

Grab one of those corporate gift bottles of wine given to your parents from under the tree, raid the pantry for juice and fruit, and you're all set to give this drink recipe a try.

1 gallon dry red wine
1/2 c white sugar
1 (46 oz) can pineapple juice
1 (8 oz) can pineapple chunks
1 orange, sliced into rounds
1 lime, sliced into rounds

In a large punch bowl combine red wine, sugar and pineapple juice. Mix in the pineapple chunks, orange slices and lime slices. Serve chilled.

(Recipe from www.allrecipes.com)

If you fail to channel your inner chef for the potluck party because you're short on time or short on culinary know-how, it's time to call your friendly neighborhood food entrepreneurs.

Try Apple's Kitchen at 7247868, 7269820 or 0917-8436573. They offer party platters good for 10-12 people. Prices range from P400-P850. Also, AnneBee Delights at 196 Tagaytay St., Justinville Subd. Bacoor, Cavite can cater to people from the South Area. Call 046-5719874. You can also ask relatives and friends for their own recommendations.

LIFE STYLE

It could have been you. But you were spared. Now how are you going to say thank you?

Give a little love this Christmas

By Pam Pastor

While some of us were thankful for the extra-long weekend, just outside the city, typhoon Yoyong caused countless people pain and suffering.

Can you imagine losing your belongings, your home and worse, your loved ones, just before Christmas? I cannot even fathom the anguish of that.

Now, hundreds (even thousands) of them are packed in various evacuation centers all over, with hardly anything to eat and nothing to keep them warm.

It could have been us, but we were spared. How are we going to say thank you?

There are a lot of ways. Bring a little holiday cheer to people who need it the most. Here's how:

You don't need to go all the way to Rizal or Quezon. There are various organizations willing to bring your donations to those who need them.

The Inquirer is currently part of the humanitarian effort called "Operation Sagip Buhay." You can drop off your donations at the Philippine Daily Inquirer building, Chino Roces Ave. corner Yague and Mascardo streets.

Send food, blankets, mattresses, and dry clothing to Caritas in Pandacan. Call 5641831

Bring rice, noodles, sardines, clothing, blankets, and other donations to the ABS-CBN Foundation office at 65 Scout Gauda St., Barangay Laging Handa, Quezon City. Donors may also call 4163650; 4163653; 4163630; 4110848; 4160387; and 9257380.

Cash and check donations may also be given to ABS-CBN Foundation through Equitable PC-Bank Savings Account 127-6008036 and BPI Current Account 3051-1102-17

Petron service stations in Metro Manila are also accepting cash and other donations on behalf of ABS-CBN.

Food, medicine, clothes, toiletries, and cash can be brought to the GMA Kapuso Foundation office (EDSA cor 11th Jamboree St., Diliman, QC) or at drop-off centers at Ever Gotesco malls and McDonald's outlets. Call 9284299/9289351 or e-mail gmat@gmanet-work.com and bispigayan@gmanet-work.com.

Cash donations may be deposited at any Metrobank branch under the name of GMA Kapuso Foundation.

Construction materials, corn seeds and other means by which people can start rebuilding their homes and their sources of living would be appreciated too.

Lastly, let's not forget to pray for them.

A LEADERSHIP camp tried to make some 50 young Filipinos reconsider their negative views about the Philippines.

The leadership and team-building camp was organized by the Galing Pilipino Movement (GPM), a non-stock, non-profit organization seeking to boost Filipino excellence and pride.

From Nov. 12 to 15, 2b1U joined 50 students from different high schools, colleges and universities—San Beda College, Polytechnic University of the Philippines (Sta. Mesa), Adamson University, UP Diliman, De La Salle University, Far Eastern University, University of Asia and the Pacific, College of the Holy Spirit, Asia Pacific College, Technological Institute of the Philippines, Baliuag University, University of San Carlos (Cebu) and Sunrise Christian College (Butuan City)—in a camp to fulfill the GPM mission to “build the person, build the heart, build the spirit” of young Filipino leaders.

“We want the participants of the workshop to focus on the ‘galing’ of Filipinos and hopefully, we could establish a community of leaders and subsequently a ‘nation of character,’” said Erlinda De Guzman, president and founder of GPM.

Before heading to PARTICIPANTS come from different universities and parts of the country but they seem to have been friends for a long time.

the training venue in La Corona De Pagsanjan, participants first visited the SOS Village in Lipa City. SOS Village is home to several “family houses” for orphaned and abused children. GPM has been one of SOS’ partners.

Speakers included Edru Abraham, founder of Kontemporaryong Gamelan Pilipino (KONTRA-GAPI), the resident ethnic music and dance ensemble of the College of Arts and Letters of UP Diliman, Bobbie Lagman, wife of slain labor leader Feimoun “Popoy” Lagman; and Dr. Jose Pepito Manansala Cunanman, founder of Sigla Earth Energy. They stressed love of country to the participants.

Enlightening

“The GPM camp enlightened me,” said Jessie Consolacion, Education student from PUP-Sta. Mesa. “I now know that I have to do something not only for myself but for my country.”

For her part, 14-year-old Erica May Naranjo from Christian Values School, said, “I realized that even in the midst of all our hardships, some good things still happen.”

Krischelle Mayuga, 20, AB Political Science student from FEU, said, “One thing I learned from the camp is that the Philippine case is not hopeless, as long as there are still Filipinos who are willing to help our country.”

Paul Ryan Espina, 25, former Political Science student at UP-Cebu and an Accountancy graduate in the Technological Institute of the Philippines (TIP), added, “GPM camp surprised me. I went there to have fun, but it was more than just fun. Now I feel rejuvenated (to) do great things like I’d dreamed of before.”

The most anticipated and most exciting part of the camp, however, was the Ropes Course Challenge in La Corona De Pagsanjan. The course reinforced the lessons that campers had learned from the lectures.

Although the campers had not known at first what to expect from the camp, at the end of the training, everyone did not just go home rich in new learning and new friends, but more important, with renewed hope for the

DMCI's 50 years of Passionate Building

As D. M. Consunji Incorporated (DMCI) celebrates its 50th Anniversary, the country's leading construction company marks fifty years of innovation and leadership in both building and in nation-building.

DMCI was founded on December 24, 1954 by David M. Consunji, a civil engineer from the University of the Philippines. Over the years, both the man and the company he founded grew "in wisdom and in grace," becoming the nation's acknowledged leader in the building of every conceivable structure and all stages of the construction business.

DMCI's reputation as a pioneering builder remains as enviable as ever. Through continuing research, DMCI has become the acknowledged innovator of advanced construction technology in the Philippines. Because of this, DMCI has kept both its old clients and continues to add to its ever-lengthening list of satisfied customers.

The company has received various awards including "Outstanding Contractor for Building" in 1992, a certificate of appreciation from the U.S. Department of the Navy, and a Safety Award from Flour Daniels Corporation for 2 million accident-free man-hours of work at the Pilipinas Shell Petroleum Corporation's STAR project.

AYALA Triangle, new Makati Stock Exchange Building

Consunji himself was cited as one of the four awardees of The Outstanding Filipino (TOFIL) of 2002 for his invaluable contribution to development and progress.

It's probably because Consunji considers himself to be more than just a builder and his work not merely structures of stone, steel and glass. "Construction is not only a science but also an art. No matter how strictly you comply with the procedures, if the product is not favorable, nobody will appreciate it. Your client will not be satisfied with it," Consunji says.

DMCI's motto says it all: Speed, Skill, and Responsibility. To the founder and his company, clients, suppliers and employees are foremost in every project.

Through five decades, the company has stuck with its belief that construction is a noble profession vital to economic development and national progress, and that fair competition is essential to the growth and stability of the entire country.

The DMCI logo Consunji conceived the predominantly blue color of the DMCI logo because blue is the color of service and construction is about service.

"The rectangle represents responsibility in absolute terms. It is closed, complete. To me, being responsible is the first and most important attribute of a builder. He is responsible when he has all the resources of a builder—knowledge, experience, materials, and equipment—and when he harnesses these resources to do the job competently and to complete it on time. The ellipse, to my mind, is a representation of skill. Skill translates to grace, elegance and beauty. Work done with skill is beautiful. And a good builder should always strive for a beautiful structure."

THE NEW Istana Palace in Brunei

Consunji explains.

Another very important attribute of a builder is speed, which is possible only by having skilled workers and all the right tools. "To represent speed, I used the rocket, which is the fastest vehicle man has invented," he says.

Contributions and innovation to the construction industry

As early as 1954, DMCI was using existing construction equipment to design above-industry-average concrete strength of 2,000 psi to 3,000 psi in the construction of the UP Chapel. The domed church was such a structural feat at the time that a virtual who's who in the construction industry regularly visited the jobsite to witness the construction.

In the early 60s, Philippine National Bank's Escalante head office was the country's biggest single construction project. Due to its cramped location in downtown Manila, DMCI pioneered the use of the first building tower crane to transport materials and concrete vertically. DMCI was also able to locally source the required metal frameworks that exceeded the strictest requirements. To this day, the old PNB Escalante building remains one of the strongest structures in an area where many structures have been brought down or seriously damaged by earthquakes.

DMCI used innovative US precast concrete technology for the construction of the Teresa housing project in Novaliches and a four-storey Dominican building in España. These were the earliest pre-cast concrete buildings in the country.

In 1974, after the government committed to host the Miss Universe Pageant, the Folk Arts Theater in Manila's reclaimed area was chosen as the venue. Given a very short 77 days to complete the project, DMCI took on the task of general contractor to supervise the work.

To ensure on-time completion, DMCI used modular construction designs and PERT-CPM schedulers to guide the project team.

In the 80s, DMCI was commissioned to construct a 20-km water duct line to connect Ipo Dam to the Balara filtration plant in Quezon City. DMCI applied value engineering in duct construction. Procedures were reviewed and revised, and metal roll forms were conceptualized and fabricated to achieve the required construction quality and complete the project on schedule.

DMCI also takes pride in introducing the table formwork system during the concreting stage of the Pacific Plaza. The system ensures predictability and sustainability as well as quality. Pacific Plaza was the first building locally to require the high-quality concrete strength of 6000 psi.

In the early 90s, 8000 psi concrete was used for the construction of the Mega Petron building in Makati. DMCI was the first to perfect the use of locally available additives (fly ash) for the project.

DMCI, together with Bachy Soletanche HK, also introduced battered piles instead of concrete driven piles for the construction of SM Cebu Shopping Mall.

Today, DMCI continuously challenges its organization to adapt to the new methodologies and technologies needed to sustain the construction industry's growth. The best evidence of this can be seen in DMCI's current railway, power plant, waterworks and sewerage system projects.

The search for more efficient construction methodologies is the company's corporate mantra to achieve the best work at the most efficient cost and in the shortest time possible.

DMCI goes public In December 18, 1995, DMCI Holdings Inc. went public in an Initial Public Offering. Under the holding firm are wholly owned subsidiaries D.M. Consunji, Inc., the construction group, and DMCI Project Developers Inc., the real estate and infrastructure investment group.

DMCI Homes builds exclusive communities with country club amenities

DMCI Homes has been in the business since 2000 only but has been making big strides largely because of the high quality of its projects and a growing base of satisfied clients.

The property development business unit of the D.M. Consunji Group of Companies already has 10 residential developments in Metro Manila, each one offering ready-for-occupancy units. More projects are in the pipeline in the coming years, including joint ventures with landowners.

"If you look at our units, you will notice immediately the high quality of our finishes. That is an advantage we have because we are supported by the 50 years of experience and expertise of DMCI in construction," said Freddie Austria, head of DMCI Homes.

DMCI Homes, he added, builds exclusive, secure, landscaped and well-planned communities with country club amenities.

But while the projects'

- High-end amenities. Central to any

DMCI Homes community are luxurious lifestyle amenities such as swimming pool, clubhouse and sports facilities for the residents to enjoy any time of the day.

- Wide and well-landscaped open spaces are commonly found in a DMCI Homes' gated community.

- Ready-for-occupancy units. DMCI Homes offers readily available units and/or fast turnover of no longer than one year from the start of construction.

- High-quality workmanship. Only first-class materials and world-class construction methods are used, reflecting DMCI's trusted expertise in the business.

- Quality Warranty. DMCI Homes is the only developer that warrants to repair material and workmanship defects on the unit, if any, within one year from the date of buyer's acceptance.

- Exclusivity. Urban communities by DMCI Homes are gated and with perimeter fence for maximum security, putting together an exclusive and family-friendly neighborhood.

- Strategic location. Near Makati and Ortigas central business districts, the developments are conveniently accessible to schools, malls, churches, and government offices.

DMCI Homes' price ranges from P840,000 up to P1,500,000. For more information, please call 888-333 or visit its website at www.dmci-homes.com.

It is one of the acknowledged leaders in the Philippine construction industry, with a sterling reputation for quality projects delivered on time and its pioneering application of advanced engineering technology.

DMCI Project Developers

Inc., on the other hand, is engaged in construction investments primarily through its significant minority interests in various projects and strategic partners, which add value and expertise to the various aspects of project development and implementation.

Growth and diversification To maximize and sustain growth, DMCI forged alliances with international companies well-known in their respective fields of specialization. These alliances not only strengthened DMCI's market dominance, but also gave it the benefit of technology transfer.

DMCI currently has joint venture undertakings with John Laing International, an international general contractor with over 150 years experience, and Biwater International Ltd., a company with more than 35 years' experience in water and wastewater treatment services and environmental engineering.

Other DMCI partners include: Bachy Soletanche Group, whose specialty is foundation engineering and ground technology; Obayashi, one of the biggest construction companies in Japan, Nishimatsu, a Japanese firm specializing in civil engineering; and Marubeni and Itochu, two of the biggest sogoshosha in Japan.

The company has also tied up with Canada-based Eco Process and Equipment International for the supply and installation of wastewater treatment systems in the Philippines.

One of the most significant developments in the DMCI group's pursuit of strategic investments was the acquisition of a 66-percent interest in Semirara Coal Corporation in April 1997. A publicly listed firm, Semirara is the country's largest coal producer, with a current annual capacity of 2.2 million metric tons. The company has the exclusive rights to explore, mine and develop the coal resources in 500-hectare Semirara Island in Caluya, Antique, 300 kilometers south of Metro Manila.

A Passion to Build: A Memoir

THE CENTER of Leadership, Citizenship and Democracy (CLCD) of the UP National College of Public Administration and Governance (UPNCPAG), UP College of Engineering and the Philippine Constructors Association is launching "A Passion to Build: A Memoir of David M. Consunji," written by its founder and chair David M. Consunji.

The launching coincides with DMCI Holdings Inc. 50th Anniversary celebration.

The center has also encouraged acknowledged leaders in various fields like Vice President Emmanuel Pataz, Senator Raul Manglapus, Justice Cecilia Muñoz Palma to write their own memoirs.

Former UP president Dr. Jose Abueva, who wrote the book's foreword, said the center believes that "good leaders are among the nation's most valuable assets. They are important lessons to be learned from their ideas, reflections, insights and experiences."

The book starts with the early life of Consunji, both during the pre-war and post-war period. It chronicles

DMCI Homes offers

WITH the non-stop price increase in basic commodities, it is becoming more and more difficult for a typical Filipino family to own its dream house. Most families start out by renting apartments or townhouses, hoping against hope that one day they would have saved enough to purchase their own house. While this may seem ideal, it also means working doubly hard to cover the monthly rent, the daily expenses, plus saving enough cash for the dream property. But what if a family were allowed to live their dream house? And instead paying rent, they are actually paying their regular installment without having to shell out a huge amount of money upfront. DMCI Homes knows that every Filipino family dreams of having its own home. And while this subsidiary of the 50-year-old D.M. Consunji Inc. has been

Semirara emerges as DMCI's top earning subsidiary

SEMIWARA Mining Corporation (SMC) became the top earner of the Consunji owned DMCI Holdings after it contributed P794 million in net profit to the conglomerate in the first nine months of the year, compared to only P70.2 million in same period last year. Surging sales volume and coal prices have allowed SMC to post a 1,030-percent increase in its net income in the first nine months of the year to P793.96 million compared with P70.21 million the previous year. Total sales jumped 122 percent to P3.64 billion from P1.64 billion from the previous year's level.

"With the strong performance of SMC, DMCI has solidified its position as the leading coal supplier in the country and is on track toward its goal of helping the country lessen its dependence on imported coal, and in effect help the country save on precious dollars," Isidro A. Consunji, SMC vice chair said.

To share its corporate wealth with its shareholders, SMC has declared a 900-percent stock dividend to existing shareholders, amounting to P225 million (equivalent to 225 million shares).

SMC accounts for 93 percent of local coal production, and accounts for 31 percent of the country's overall requirements, including imports. The firm's annual coal production will reach 2.6 million tons per year. The firm generates 100 percent of its revenues through the production of sub-bituminous coal.

SMC has a guaranteed long-term market because of its supply contract with the National Power Corporation. The firm also supplies the coal requirement for Philippine National Oil Corporation-Exploration Corporation, Mirant Philippines Power Plants and almost all of the cement manufacturing plants in the country.

"The growth of the mining industry is a critical ingredient for greater economic growth, attracting more investments, creating more jobs, and reducing poverty more speedily, particularly in the provinces," Consunji said.

Community development programs

With the firm's high performance financial results, its commitment for social and environmental development of the local community increased. SMC has constructed classrooms and school buildings. Scholarships are granted to deserving students from the island.

Roads were built linking all the barangays in the Island. SMC's electrification program benefited 543 households in seven barangays.

SMC envisions Semirara to be an eco-tourism center. It rehabilitated the Unong mine pit into a water reservoir and fish culture pond. As part of the firm's environmental protection and enhancement programs, it has developed 200 hectares of mangrove plantation around the island. To date, over 18,000 seedlings have been planted in 64 hectares, providing direct employment for the islanders.

Since DMCI's takeover of Semirara in 1997, it has progressively evolved and employs efficient, safe and environment-friendly mining system. Through the years, DMCI has become a byword in the construction world, responsible for building local and international landmarks such as the UP Chapel, the first building along Ayala Avenue, the Pacific Plaza, the CCP Complex, including the Westin Philippine Today, DMCI continues to lead the construction industry, building everything from high-rise condominium and commercial buildings to power plants and housing projects. The company's passion for excellent work and delivering on time remains undiminished fifty years later.

Truly, the company founded half a century ago by David M. Consunji is the best expression of his enduring passion to build.

According to DMCI director of marketing Rey C. Salazar, in the past, the company required a 10-percent contract price before buyers were allowed to move into the units they had purchased. "We realized that due to the harsh economic times prevailing today, some buyers have difficulty in meeting this requirement. Most buyers take the option of paying the unit with a certain amount of downpayment spread over a number of months. They move in months after they have purchased the unit. Now since the units are ready for occupancy and the units are on hold, it was only logical that we made things easier for these serious buyers. In practice, Salazar explains, "We allow buyers to move into the units they chose to purchase with less front end money involved. ## Bettinna beyond beauty

Still in high school, she's gearing to be a filmmaker

By Cathy Azanza
Contributor

APART from her beauty and talent, one of the most striking characteristics of young actress Bettinna Carlos is her razor sharp memory. She remembering exact dates of special moments in her life.

Recently, Bettinna committed a new date to memory: Oct. 25. It was the day she tied with Pauleen Luna for the award of Best New Female Television Personality in this year's PM-PC Star Awards.

At the age of 16, Bettinna has already captured the public, having starred in GMA 7's horror suspense show "Kakabakaba," and more recently appearing opposite Railey Valeroso in "Love to Love."

Learning to like it

Bettinna says she never meant to enter show business. She never even dreamt of becoming an actress or a commercial model.

"I would go to school, and then I would just play volleyball," she says. "That was really my interest." It was not until her mother picked up a newspaper with a print ad for Trumpets Playshop Modeling Workshop did Bettinna even consider finding a place in the spotlight.

"Ayaw ko talaga nung una," she recalls. "But I tried it anyway and I learned to like it. You'll never know what you can do until you try."

In the workshop, Bettinna was approached by Playshop teacher and talent caster David Cosico, who arranged for her initial video tape recording (VTR). Soon after, Bettinna found herself appearing in print ads and doing ramp modeling.

"My first ramp show was for this teen fashion magazine called HIP 2b Fab," says Bettinna.

na, "then I went for a VTR for a GMA 7 station ID and I passed it."

Her work on this station plug was enough to earn her an invitation to participate in a new program that the network launched months later. The show was the thriller "Kakabakaba," and it marked the beginning of Bettinna's life as a teen star.

Homework on the set

Despite the long taping hours, Bettinna diligently attends to her studies at the University of the Philippines Integrated School (UP-IS), where she is a scholar. In addition to packing her costumes for any given shoot, Bettinna makes sure to take along her laptop so that she can do her homework between takes.

"School is a priority, of course," she declares without hesitating. "If I had to pick between show biz and school, I would pick school. Importante yung nakapag-aral ka. Show business is not forever. One day you could be a star, then the next day, hindi ka na sikat."

"I've given up some movie offers kasi 'di na talaga kaya ng schedule ko yung shooting for movies. I'm graduating this year and I have college exams to worry about. Siyempre you have to prepare and study for them."

Bettinna is setting her sights on further education in UP where she plans to take Film and Audio Visual Communication. "I wanted to be a doctor, I think, when I was a little girl," she says. "But now, because I got exposed to show business, I want to go into film. I enjoy the acting part of my job, but I also want to get into directing."

This early, Bettinna has spent some of her free time on the set trying to learn about shooting and editing. She observed director Mark Reyes at work during the tapings of "Kakabakaba."

"Super idol ko si Direk Mark," she gushes. "Pag may taping kami, unpo lang ako du'n sa OB van and I watch him call the shots. He explained to me how everything worked."

Saving lives

Bettinna's ambitions, however, do not end with pursuing a career as a film director. She has participated in programs under GMA 7's Kapuso Foundation. Recently, she shared an afternoon with the Philippine National Red Cross youth volunteers in celebration of their Youth Month.

"I was only supposed to sing 'Superman,' but I felt I had to say something so I ended up giving a speech. It was the first time I gave an impromptu speech like that. The volunteers were not older than 20. I told them, 'Live a physiologically clean life. Save your blood. By being a blood donor, you can save many lives. And who knows? It might even be a loved one's life that you could save.'"

The Red Cross experience inspired Bettinna to pursue an application to join the core. "I'm so proud that I can say that there are members of our generation that have a notion of social responsibility. Sabi kasi nila liberated masyado ang generation namin. It's good to know that there are good examples among the youth."

When asked about her ultimate goal in life, Bettinna says, "I want to be an inspiration to other people. I want the youth to see that you can balance school with work and still help the community."

"Your reward is the fulfillment of making other people happy."

"I WANT to be an inspiration to other people," declares the 16-year-old Bettinna Carlos

Marco gets vote of sympathy for 'It Might Be You' role

FAST-RISING teen star Marco Alcaraz is steadily gaining a new set of fans for his challenging and ever-evolving role as Axel in the top-rating ABS-CBN primetime soap, "It Might Be You."

Now married to Cielo (Bea Alonzo), Axel finds himself being the martyr husband as he does everything he can to allow Cielo to see her long-time sweetheart, Lawrence (John Lloyd Cruz).

It's this sudden change of heart that's been winning the character—and the actor—more admirers who eagerly await each episode with excitement.

"If there's anyone who deserves credit for making the show the big success that it is today," Marco notes, "it's the avid followers and fans, as well as the show's writers who continue to make the story interesting enough to follow. I wouldn't be where I am now without all of them."

Suddenly, the fledgling actor is flooded with messages of sympathy.

"Mabait naman pala siya (So, he's really a good person!)" a fan muses. "Napakamartir naman niya (But he's such a martyr)," adds another.

Not too long ago, Marco, a basketball player-turned-commercial model, was thrust in the limelight via the soap. "Whatever success I'm enjoying now, I owe to the show," he stresses.

He has appeared in ads for San Miguel, Astring-o-sol, Chowking, Smart, PLDT and Shopwise, and also modeled for Rustan's Springfield, GAS and Bench. He is currently an image model of JAG Jeans and Converse Shoes and among the biggest talents of ALV Productions Inc.

Marco is now one of ABS-CBN's hottest teen stars. He has also been tapped to join Regal Idols, Regal Films' latest batch of teen talents, and signed up with Star Cinema.

After a cameo role in Regal's recently released "A Beautiful Life," Marco is in the movie company's Metro Manila Filmfest entry, "Aishite Imasu (1941)," a Japanese period film directed by Joel Lamangan, and which stars Judy Ann Santos, Raymart Santiago, Angelu de Leon, Dennis Trillo and Jay Manalo. Marco plays a Japanese soldier who falls in love with a Filipina (Myx VJ Iya Villania).

He is thankful for Direk Joel's very thorough and disciplined approach to work. "Most actors are scared of him," Marco says, "and now, I understand why. But it's all for good reason. He wants you to give your best every time."

Fans can write Marco at ALV Productions Inc., Suite 902, The Taipan Place, Emerald Ave., Ortigas Center, 1605.

Salute! to 6 artists

WASHINGTON—Elton John called his Kennedy Center Honor "icing on the cake," but actor Robert Downey Jr. got a frosty reception when he introduced the rock legend as "the other first lady."

SHOW STOPPER

Warren Beatty, Ossie Davis and Ruby Dee were honored Sunday with a star-studded tribute at The Kennedy Center. The six recipients of the 27th annual Kennedy Center Honors were saluted for their lifetime contributions to American culture through the performing arts.

But Downey stole the show with his rambling tribute to John. The actor said he—like losing presidential candidate John Kerry—was suffering "from acute symptoms of another dual-diagnosis disease of mine: the ADD, of course, the altruistic Democrat disorder."

Three phrases

That drew nervous laughter from the audience, which included Senator Kerry as well as President George W. Bush and Mrs. Bush, Vice President Dick Cheney and his wife, Lynne, Secretary of State Colin Powell and the woman nominated to replace him, Condoleezza Rice.

John, 57, has sold more than 60 million albums in three decades with hits such as "Rocket Man" and "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road." Downey said three phrases came to mind when he thought of John: "genius, life saver, the other first lady."

At a reception at the White House Sunday afternoon, John said winning the honor "is about the icing on the cake. ...It's incredible for someone who's British to be given such an accolade from America, which has given me so much already in my career."

John was also serenaded by Kid Rock and Billy Joel.

Beatty, 67, is an actor, writer, producer and director. He has been nominated for Academy Awards 15 times, and won an Oscar in 1982 as best director for "Reds."

Beatty's vanity

Jack Nicholson, Beatty's neighbor and a previous honoree, said: "For years, Warren has dreamed of attending these awards. Unfortunately, not as a Kennedy honoree but as president of the United States."

Nicholson's comments about Beatty's legendary vanity even had Vice President Dick Cheney laughing out loud.

Australian-born soprano Sutherland, 78, was saluted by fellow opera singers Sherrill Milnes and Marilyn Horne, a previous honoree. Milnes called Sutherland "an avalanche of sound. She's become the standard by which all others are measured."

Composer and conductor Williams, 72, has won five Academy Awards, 17 Grammys and two Emmys and is best known for his film scores for "Star Wars," "Jaws," "Raiders of the Lost Ark" and "E.T."

Director Steven Spielberg called Williams "a national treasure, as American as apple pie and President Bush's mom," and noted, "John Williams' scores are guaranteed to make you use a whole box of Kleenex."

Spielberg mused that he told Williams that his two note score for the movie "Jaws" seemed rather thin, but Williams replied, "I really think that's all you need."

Davis, 86, and Dee, 79, were celebrated for having appeared together and separately in more than 50 films.

Sentimental note

The annual celebration began with a Saturday dinner at the US State Department hosted by departing Secretary of State Colin Powell, and continued with a White House reception on Sunday hosted by President George W. Bush and first lady Laura Bush.

The celebration concluded with the Sunday evening Honors Gala at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts attended by 2,400 invitees, including actress Faye Dunaway and singer Billy Joel.

The evening began on a sentimental note as journalist Walter Cronkite, who has hosted the awards for the past quarter century, handed the master of ceremonies duties to President Kennedy's daughter Caroline.

The Honors Gala will be broadcast later in December on the CBS television network as a two-hour prime time special.

Sean "R. Diddy" Combs, who appeared in a recent Broadway revival of "A Raisin in the Sun," said he was inspired by Dee, who starred in the original production. "Ruby wanted me to understand how high the stakes were, that failure was not an option," Combs said.

'National Treasure' digs up more millions at the tills

LOS ANGELES — Nicolas Cage logged a third weekend atop the North American box office on Sunday with his action-adventure "National Treasure," but overall ticket sales slid as movies competed for attention with shopping in the post-Thanksgiving holiday period.

One of the hardest-hit films was director Oliver Stone's "Alexander," which earned an estimated $4.7 million in the three days beginning Friday, losing about two-thirds of its opening-weekend tally as it dropped one place to No. 7.

The $150 million swords-and-sandals epic, starring Colin Farrell as the youthful Macedonian warrior, has pulled in $29.7 million after 12 days, and should finish with about $40 million, said a spokesperson for Warner Bros. Pictures. The studio paid $35 million for North American rights from producer Intermedia Films, a unit of Munich-based IM Internationalmedia AG. Intermedia has said it expects the film to do much better internationally, just as "Troy" did recently.

"National Treasure" dug up an estimated $17.1 million, taking its total to $110.3 million. The Walt Disney Co. picture is on track to surpass 1996's "The Rock" ($134 million) as Cage's biggest movie.

Sole newcomer

The only new entry in the top 10 was director Mike Nichols' potty-mouthed adultery drama "Closer," which opened at No. 6 with $7.7 million, a hefty number for a limited release.

Columbia Pictures' London-set drama, an adaptation of a play by British playwright Patrick Marber, stars Julia Roberts as a photographer who beds both Jude Law's journalist character and Clive Owen's dermatologist. Natalie Portman plays a stripper who also gets sack time with both men.

While all the movies in the top five played in more than 3,100 theaters each, "Closer" was launched in just 476 to "give it some time to mature," said Rory Bruer, president of domestic theatrical distribution at the Sony Corp.-owned studio. "It's daring, it's provocative, people are going to talk about it."

The studio will add 150 runs next weekend, and hopes the film's momentum will be boosted as critics' groups start naming their top picks of the year.

According to tracking firm Exhibitor Relations, the top 12 films earned $80 million, down 47 percent from last weekend, and off 10 percent from the year-ago period, when Tom Cruise's "The Last Samurai" opened at No. 1 with $24.3 million.

Columbia's holiday comedy "Christmas with the Kranks," starring Tim Allen and Jamie Lee Curtis, rose one place to No. 2 with $11.7 million. After two weekends, the film has earned $45.5 million.

'Express' chugs along

The costly computer-animated children's fable "The Polar Express," which started off slowly three weeks ago, is still chugging along, rising one to No. 3 with $11 million. The total for Warner Bros.' $170 million-budgeted production rose to $96.4 million. The Time Warner Inc.-owned studio partnered on the project with real-estate heir Steve Bing.

A Warner's spokesperson predicted the Tom Hanks film would at least hit $130 million. He noted that it was No. 2 to "National Treasure" during the week, while its 43 percent drop from last weekend was the smallest among the wide releases in the top 10.

"CLOSER," starring Julia Roberts and Clive Owen and directed by Mike Nichols, joins the top 10

The superhero cartoon "The Incredibles" fell two places to No. 4 with $9.2 million in its fifth weekend, taking its total to $226 million. The Disney-distributed film was produced by Pixar Animation Studios Inc.

Yet another cartoon, "The SpongeBob Squarepants Movie," held steady at No. 5 with $7.8 million in its third weekend.

The total for the cable TV adaptation rose to $68.4 million. It was released by Paramount Pictures, a unit of Viacom Inc.
